Sir,—I read with great interest Mr. Pearson's letter asking dealers to form a society so that they will have a better chance of fighting against the inspectors of the R.S.P.C.A., when charged with cruelty to their birds. I quite agree with Mr. Pearson's idea that they should join together, for I know from my own experience that the inspectors are not always in the right. Still, at the same time, it is a good thing that we have these inspectors, for there are cases which have come under my notice when I have thought that the birds were not getting proper attention. I am a bird fancier myself and have been for the last twenty years, and I have visited most of our large towns. There have been instances, even in my own town (Manchester) where I have seen birds packed in the cages, and I think it right the inspectors should try to put a stop to this overcrowding in small cages. Speaking of the birdshops in Tib Street, the birds are very well kept. Messrs. Davis', Dutton's, and Smith's birds and shops are a credit to them. Would every dealer was as clean and attentive to their birds and surroundings. I should like to mention one point about the Roller Canary, and the small twig cage they are kept in after arriving in this country. I have often stood and listened to these songsters, and while doing so I have heard people say that they cannot see what the birds are like, and which of the birds is singing. If the dealers would adopt the idea of transferring about a dozen or two dozen of their cock birds separately into box cages (such as the Norwich show cage) I think they would get a quicker sale. It would give the outsider a fair chance to see what the birds are like.

MANCHESTER.

The Keeping and Feeding of Goldfinches.

Sir,—I am a lover of this lovely British songster, and I beg to give my experience. My mode of feeding is as follows: Half-part canary, half-part teazle, quarter-part hemp, niger and German rape, with now and then a little linseed, maw, and thistle; green food, such as cress, lettuce and, when obtainable, groundsel and dandelion seeding heads and leaves. I keep mine out of doors in the conservatory in box cages, with loose wire fronts, so that they are easily cleaned, with two (some of the cages with three) perches. A door in front for bath, and a door at end for running the bird out when about to clean cage. Nice gritty sand on bottom of cage, which I renew as often as possible, but at least twice a week. I find when a bird seems a bit out of sorts, listless, and "puffed out," a little syrup of buckthorn in the drinking water (just colour the water) is excellent, but some will die now and then, being, I suppose, those with delicate constitutions. I believe myself that being of an active disposition, the larger the cage the better; and more especially is this the case when moulting. The bath is also a necessity, and those who will not go into the bath I spray with an ordinary sprayer. I cannot claim to be an expert, but give my experience for what it is worth, and I shall look forward myself to letters from others, in the hope of learning some wrinkles.

WALLINGTON GOLDFINCH LOVER.

Sir,—I have read with interest the replies to the inquiry on keeping and feeding Goldfinches. I cannot quite agree with one letter. It brought to my mind a visit I once paid to a fancier who, while showing me his Goldfinches, said that he only gave them canary and rape seed; but on further discussing the matter he showed me a large assortment of wild seed, of which he gave them a teaspoonfull every day. Although their staple food was canary and rape, yet, I contend, they had as much of an assortment as if their staple food consisted also of the wild-seed mixture. My experience with Goldfinches is this: I have followed very closely the "Nutshell" booklet on Goldfinches, and given them their staple diet accordingly, at the same time getting a good wild seed mixture, and giving a little (one teaspoonful) once a week, and very often not that. If I found the Goldfinches doing very nicely on the staple food I did not give them the wild seed. If I found them not looking very fit the first thing I did was to carefully examine them by taking them from the cage and handling them. If I found them nice and plump, I gave them a very mild aperient, 10 drops of syrup of buckthorn (not salts). I then took away the hemp seed. If the Finch looked at all thin, I gave the syrup of buckthorn just the same, also the staple food, and every day a teaspoonful of a good wild seed mixture, containing a good percentage of dandelion, afterwards I added to the drinking water one teaspoonful of lime water. I have saved some good birds that way. Goldfinches are very apt to "go light." When the bird begins to look fit, I gradually reduce the lime water and the wild seed mixture, and get back to the staple food, and a "pick-me-up" now and again.

F. H. MARHOFF.

Having a Try for Mules.

Sir,—The answer given by Mr. G. E. Weston in last week's CAGE BIRDS was decidedly interesting to me, and probably this letter will be of some slight interest to Mr. Weston and your readers. I have in my possession two cock Yellowhammers, one of which has had fair success on the show bench: the second I only obtained last summer, and he was not in favour of show cages, and up to the present won't stand in one. They are kept in cages, in the garden during the warm weather, and in my living room through the winter. I quite agree with Mr. Weston that the Yellowhammer, etc., has no "voice" worth the mention, but the few notes of my birds are rather sweet in tone, and I find they "sing" during the whole of the year, except during the worst few weeks of the moult. They certainly call (or sing) louder in the breeding season. I also notice that they appear to have a partial moult in the early spring (say now) and to then become more true to the pictures one sees of them. I should like to know if it is a trait of these birds, or if it is only a peculiarity of mine? As to the chance of obtaining Hybrids from them, it is most certainly a "sporting chance," but I think it is quite possible to do so if time and patience are given to it. I am now running both my birds with hen Canaries (one yellow, one buff). The yellow is a 1912 bird, and has already been to nest with three eggs, which were all blanks. The Yellowhammer was thought to have done his part, and now that they are together again I have watched more closely, and find my hen does not hold properly to the perch during the pairing "process." This is apparently due to a partially "slipped" claw and the cock cannot get proper hold owing to the hen falling over, the back claw on one of her feet being of little use to hold with, although it is not badly out of place. As I have not another hen for him, he will have to wait while the other gets through with the buff hen, which is coming four years old, and a good breeder. Neither of these birds is so forward as the others, but are good friends, and the Yellowhammer has previously tried his luck with a Canary without result. I know it is not usual to advertise one's failures, but as I have got further than one or two others who have tried, I feel encouraged to try again, and should you, sir, feel sufficiently interested I will let you know later on what sort of luck I have. I thought perhaps Mr. J. Pauley might be encouraged to try, if he should hear that a novice like myself was also having a shot at it, and I certainly wish him all success if he does. I should like to hear how he gets on and if he cares to would be pleased to compare notes with him.

B. PAIN.

(We shall be most pleased to hear further from Mr. Pain. Details of such experiments are always of great interest, whether successful or otherwise, and we hope other readers will follow Mr. Pain's lead, and send us for publication accounts of their experiences during the breeding season.—Ed.)

Birds Getting on Cage Floor.

Sir,—A correspondent asks how to stop birds from getting on floor to feed. Why not fix seed and water vessels on middle rail and fix cross perch to suit ditto? It is quite possible.

Kindness or Cruelty?

An Interesting Account of a Pet Canary.

Sir,—This is a short description of the bird seen in the photo. He was bred from a ticked buff cock and clear yellow hen on the 19th of April, 1910, and is from a nest of seven, which the mother refused to feed after about ten days, but I thought rather than let them die I would, with the help of a friend try and hand rear them. Alas! they died off one after another until there only remained this one. Until he was some weeks old he had nothing to drink but milk, and even now he hardly touches water, but will ask for milk so plainly that a stranger can tell what he wants. He practically has his freedom, and is allowed at large as much as he likes, except when meals are being prepared, and he is then shut up in his cage as he is so inquisitive, and wants to know what everything is, and is afraid of nothing. At mealtimes he will sit on my own or my friend's shoulder, and try and get at the food as it is being put into our mouths. We also had a French poodle, and the bird would perch on his head or back, and tug at his coat, but they were the best of friends, and he never once tried to harm the bird. He will also sit on my pipe and pick the tobacco out, and without any harmful results to himself. To see him chase the Sparrows is most amusing, but upset him and then one has to look out for squalls. He comes for one like a little tiger. He is a most accomplished little singer. Someone may say yes, he may do this with you, but will he with anyone else? All I can say is, come and see, as heaps of others have done. I guarantee that the biggest strangers can put him through his tricks as well as my friend or I can (especially if members of humanitarian societies, as I feel sure he would know they were kind to all dumb creatures). This is not the only case of tameness of birds I have now and have had in the past, as there are several birds flying about my bird room that come every day for their feed of seed, etc, which is put out for them, and I have them tame enough to take it out of my hand and come when called. Is this done by cruelty or kindness? I feel sure if the members of the humanitarian societies would only go to some of our shows they would come away with quite a different opinion of the hard-hearted (!) men and women, who resort to the cruel practice of keeping birds shut up in captivity.

The Trouble About the Southern Norwich Painhead Club's £10 10s. Cup.

A Settlement Satisfactory, We Hear, to All Concerned.

Sir,—I, like "Interested," formed a similar conclusion, owing to the President's ruling at the annual meeting that the original rule as framed and printed cannot be altered. Whether the right be waived or not, the original competitive rule stands to-day. The controversy could be settled once and for all by awarding the cup to the winner by these rules, and perhaps the gentleman who thinks he has the claim of it would give the trophy back for further competition, under rules that could not be ambiguous or liable to misconstruction—it is now no secret that no one wants this trophy! It was inevitable that the whole trouble should be threshed out, and it will prove a good lesson to many a committee. Certain it is that those of the S.N.P.C. who have joined since 1909 had no idea of these original rules governing this cup. Therefore we are obliged to Mr. Gill. There seems to have been of late years a great activity on the part of societies to leave no stone unturned to retain trophies in their possession, and incidentally to save them from the struggle they would have to replace them. This is hard to avoid, but it would certainly add to the life of their trophies if the only birds that could compete for them were bred and shown by the exhibitors themselves. This would prevent the incentive of buying to win these cups, which is the cause of all this trouble, if I read the signs of the times aright, and the motion by Mr. Garland. Only birds bred by the exhibitor, and ringed, should compete for these said trophies. Ask where you will, either in or out of the Fancy, you can only hear of this as the fair and equitable form of competition, besides preventing the bickerings and ill feelings on all sides. This does not in any shape do away with buying birds to win, but it does allow the breeder the chance of winning what he has endeavoured to secure, whilst the other must be content with the prize-money. At any rate, it is my earnest hope and wish that all new trophies will be competed for under rules that admit of no ambiguity. I understood by reading through the correspondence that Mr. Gill's suggestion was to do away with the present cup, whereas the new complexion on the matter does not in any way embrace this, and only means a parting with cash on both sides, leaving the cup open to still further argument and to continue its career of trouble,

IPSO FACTO.

(Owing to this correspondence occupying so much space, we have had no option but to condense lengthy letters to within reasonable limits.—Ed.)

Sir,—It seems to me that both Messrs. Baker and Gill are wandering from the point at issue. Mr. Gill asked what is the position of the £10 10s. cup, and why was the cup awarded under a bye-law in 1908-9 after the cup had already been competed for at five shows under the original rules, before that bye-law was made? Mr. Baker and others would not accept Mr. Garland's motion at the last general meeting, saying that the rules governing the competition for the cup could not be altered until the cup was won outright. Now I consider Mr. Gill is quite right. He says that if Mr. Garland's proposition could not be accepted, then the bye-law in question was likewise illegal. If I read Mr. Gill's letter right, this is all that he means.

A MEMBER.

Sir,—A special committee meeting of the S.N.P.C. was held last night (April 1st) when both Mr. Gill and Mr. Baker were present. After discussion and explanation, it was agreed that the dispute had arisen through a misunderstanding of the conditions under which the cup was offered in 1908. As a result, Mr. Gill withdrew his claim, and accepted the ruling of the Committee. I have the pleasure to inform you that Messrs. Baker and Gill shook hands, and considered all letters, etc., as withdrawn. The matter is, therefore, amicably settled to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. A report of the meeting will be sent you by the Hon. Sec. in due course. In conclusion, I may say that Messrs. Baker, Gill and Hodder agreed to relinquish their claims up to date upon the cup, so that it might be put up for competition afresh under conditions to be decided by the Committee that will admit of no further misapprehension.

J. W. RAMSDEN.
Chairman of Committee.

[We have been requested by Mr. Gill to withdraw the letter he had sent for publication in reply to Mr. Baker's of last week. We think, in view of the chairman of committee's letter, notifying an amicable settlement of the dispute, that this correspondence may now very well close.—Editor.]

The Capture of Birds Wearing Marking Rings.

Sir, I wish to report the capture of a hen Greenfinch with a marking ring. The ring is marked Aberdeen University 705. The bird was captured in the early part of last January at Bonnington Goods Station. It has only been brought to my notice to-day, hence the delay in reporting.

The Future of Arbroath C.B.S.

Sir,—I feel sorry at my friend "A.B.C.'s" ignorance. I would have liked to have shown where he is very ignorant, namely about financing a show; also guaranteeing classes, but as I would require to go into the private business of the Arbroath C.B.S. I refrain from doing the least thing to damage the society, as they have been very successful up to the present. As this is the last time I am to lift my pen, I would, however, advise the committee to put a cloth over this piping Lintie, for his music is no good, and will do harm to the association.

Short Entries at Scottish Shows

Are "Clique Judges" to Blame?

Sir,—With reference to "Plainhead's" last letter he says that I agree with him that a good bird can be purchased by a judge at the price of a songster. Now, "P.H." I did not admit this, but I said "you will agree with me when I tell you that you have purchased many at 4s.6d. (and less) at Bird Stores in Edinburgh, and most of them turned out winners when showed under certain judges." You deny this, so I think it my duty to remind you of two of your last season's winners which you purchased in Edinburgh for somewhere about 2s. Did these birds win under any other judges than those whom you did most of your winning under? Did a well-known judge of Border Fancies tell you when he saw one of them at a show not to show it under him, or he would put it in its right place—he wanted no Yorkshires in Border classes? I consider it is actions by so called prominent exhibitors which are the cause of short entries at Scottish shows. You do not enlighten me on the question I asked you re exhibiting with coarse gravel, thick spars, and other distinguishing marks on show cages. You say I have tried them and ask with what results. I admit I have, and every time I used coarse gravel under a clique judge, it did lengthen my purse a bit. But when tried under any other judge, it was useless. Now, perhaps you yourself will explain in the columns of this valuable paper what benefits are derived from the use of coarse gravel, etc. As you do not say that I am the young judge who wanted to buy an exhibitor's bird which was not a "top marker," but which should have been, I need not trouble about other people's business. I did come out last year to "sweep decks," and exhibited at the first show of the season, in the Green and Cinnamon class, which I won, Did you purchase 46 Green and Cinnamon Borders and week after week show them, and win prizes with them? How did you happen to win with these birds when the former owners could not win with them? I say it was because you showed under "Clique judges," with coarse gravel, and when you were challenged about this, you used thick spars in place of coarse gravel. Both of the above would be more suitable for pigeons than the "wee gem." I hope for the benefit of the shows next season that you will practice what you preach, and with no ill-feeling to you I wish you a successful breeding season, which sometimes means a good show season.

W. Lambie (or Even Mark).

Whitburn.

Sir,—Like "Even Mark," I am now satisfied that "Plainhead" of last week, is not the one that wrote first in defence of the "Clique." Nevertheless, his reference to me comes from the same old source namely, Kirkcaldy; I am glad to say that the whole is without foundation, that is the worst of one getting second-hand information. "Plainhead" says my "guessing" assertions are not true. Now I will send three different names and addresses, and will either send them across to yourself, or to the Editor, whichever you prefer. All three names are above suspicion, and if I did not name all three correctly I will pay 10s. to Kirkcaldy Cottage Hospital, providing "Plainhead" does likewise if he is wrong. I cannot do more to convince him. Re the judges winning more before they judged than I have ever won, this is another false tale I have already answered. We could argue a year on paper and never be any further ahead, but to be practical I will, the first time you are across, allow you to examine my cards from 1899 up till now, and you can examine those of your pals. You would be clean out of it; but, as you say, that is outside of the point. I am glad to inform you that one show last week rejected two names for the Borders; they guessed correct. I presume that your reference to the man in a business refers to your humble. I did dismiss an assistant a week or two ago, but not owing to decreased sales. Nor yet was it through paying attention to other people's business. Although I dismissed one, I took on two which make one more, and my sales have never stood higher for years than they do at the present time. But, as you say, this has no bearing on the vexed subject; why did you introduce it? You have put yourself in a ridiculous position in the eyes of the Fancy in general. My business career has been like my hobby this last sixteen years, unblemished. I have nothing to keep back, and am still out to fight "Clique Judging." I daresay you have heard the story of a certain judge, who put the best birds aside and said they were colour fed. Most of the "Top-Markers" had a certain material for cage-bottom covering, and he told the steward the name of the exhibitor to whom it belonged. Of course, that is nothing to what has happened since then. You must try and get your information from a more reliable source and try and stick to the points at issue. Silence is an admission, and all the main points of my letters have never been contradicted, either by "Plainhead" No. 1 or 2. All the malice you can throw at me (both of you) will not harm me a bit. As you have already pronounced me to be honest and straightforward, you cannot go back on that. As regards to Mr. Hasting's inquiries, I may say I have never been at law; I do not intend, either, to be personal. Are you not aware that every letter that appears in Cage Birds means death to the Clique? You must excuse me for not giving you the names and proof thereof; you that are fearless of the law were to tell us something. I am still waiting to hear it.

J. Logan.

We have received a letter signed "Ne'er Surrender"; as, however, this is wholly composed of personalities directed against the fancier whom the writer considers to be "Plainhead," we cannot publish it. Correspondents must try to keep to the subject at issue. —Editor.

Getting a Chaffinch on Song.

Sir,—In reply to "Youth," feeding on the following lines should make his Chaffinches burst into full vigorous song. Give once a week a little of a good insectile food containing ants' eggs, also give a mealworm every other day, and any other insect life such as live ants' eggs, spiders, caterpillars, etc., according to the season. I have had several Chaffinches and have always kept them on full song with this treatment.

Is it Cruel to Keep Birds?

Sir,—What an interesting and delightful hobby bird-keeping can be. For instance, look how you can sit down by the fireside in winter and suddenly your Lark bursts out trilling along its joyful song. How far, mind you, in winter would you have to go to hear the Lark sing? I have never heard a Lark sing outside in winter. Who has? And yet they say it is cruel to keep birds. It may be in some conditions, but there's keeping birds and keeping birds, and the Humanitarians need not run away with the idea that all birds are kept in 6in. by 4in. Linnet cages. I have a Greenfinch now, and if I put it some distance away from its cage it will hop back into it. Has that bird been cruelly treated? No! And how many others have been tamed likewise with patience and kindness. Still these "protectors of birds" don't like it; how is it? I daresay some birds are cruelly treated in some men's hands, and if that is so the humanitarians are justified in prosecuting. But what I'm dead against is people trying to do away with the hobby, and if anybody sets up to stop the hobby, bird fanciers should get together in one united body and strike straight from the shoulder.

Appointment of Judges at Gateshead 1912 Show.

Sir,—As yet I have received no reply to my questions respecting the re-appointments of judges to extra classes at Gateshead 1912 show, and I have still to learn when, where, and by whom they were made. Seeing "Johnny" has the necessary information I shall be glad to have a "full and detailed" answer to my questions. I hope he will guarantee his information to be authoritative, as what is wanted are facts, and not suppositions. I fail to see that his own questions have any bearing upon, or connection with, the subject under discussion, but to satisfy his curiosity my replies, suggestions, and comments are as follows:—(1) I know of no person who has resigned his membership of the Gateshead Society for the reason he states, and I should be very reticent to associate myself with any such rumour. (2) If such a case has existed, an application to the secretary of the Newcastle Society would no doubt bring the information asked for. (3) No one (fancier or otherwise) to my knowledge, has acted the "Copper's tout," and I was not aware until I read his ('Johnny's') letter, that suspicion was afloat. It is evident that "Johnny" is gifted with a large amount of detective instinct, and I am not at all anxious to take the honour out of his hands, therefore I suggest that he should name the person, and give the "suspect" a chance of defending himself. What the consequences might be I am not wishful to anticipate. I cannot think that any fancier would be guilty of such conduct, and prefer to believe that this suspicion is simply the product of his imaginative mind. Should his suspicion be supported by evidence which is irrefutable, then, I repeat, give the suspect a name, and the exposure which he deserves.

Experiences of a Successful South African Bird-keeper.

Sir,—A description of my outdoor aviary may be of interest to your readers. It is quite cheaply made, but I find it very useful for Canaries and other small birds. The covered portion is 15ft. long, 6ft. high, and 4ft. deep. The floor and back is made out of cheap disused packing case boards. The roof is of canvas, as used in the Navy, and is perfectly water-tight, which is assured by giving it a coat of paint. The outer flight is 12ft. long, 6ft. high, and 6ft. wide, and is quite uncovered. The floor is covered with river sand, which is taken out and renewed fortnightly. I have a tree planted slantingly in the centre, which has a very pretty effect when occupied by a good many birds. The birds gain access to the outer flight through a small window at the back of the covered flight, which can, if necessary, be closed at night when the birds have gone to roost. I use ½in. mesh wire netting. About one hundred and twenty Yorkshires, Norwich and Crests occupy this aviary during the winter months, and it gives the stock birds plenty of stamina for their arduous duties during the breeding season. Such a thing as an egg-bound hen is an unknown quantity with me. Canary seed is the staple diet, using maw, hemp, linseed, and rape, with discretion. I supply lettuce daily as green food, giving as much as it will take the birds, say, half-an-hour to demolish. I wish Cage Birds continued success.

Rural Rambles and How to Make the Most of Them.

Sir,—Just a few notes in answer to "Unflighted," in your issue of March 22, on the above topic. Having had the great pleasure of attending a few of these rambles the procedure adopted by us ran somewhat on the lines I mention. We generally fix the date towards the end of May, or early in June, which time suits us who are stationed in Fife, but we have had to stretch the date according to the nature of the season. Then you must secure permission from a landlord who has suitable grounds for rambling, and place yourself in the hands of his keeper, and if that gentleman has a leaning to ornithology so much the better, as he will be more suited to lead you upon grounds where he has already been taking notes. Over and above, it is of great benefit to appoint one as leader, who is a recognised expert, as it were, on wild bird life, besides you can secure a few good pocket books bearing on nests and eggs, and any little doubt is easily soon settled from them. If a party is taking part in the ramble it all depends as regards time when you make a start. We have had by necessity to always make a start at midday, and we have always found plenty of time to make a good day of it, When on the march it is best to spread yourselves well out in a long line, and by taking plenty of time, paying strict attention to every little likely place, you cannot help but run into your work. Whenever something good is found send along the line a "wireless," and ca' a halt. Then down goes the notes by the scribe of the party. If anyone in the party is a camera hand, he will find something good to snap. I have seen some fine subjects returning from these rambles. British men in particular simply load up with wild seed mixtures, and the birds at home no doubt would greatly benefit by their master's day in the country. The nature of a wild seeds expedition I believe would be worked on the same lines, and I would for one would like to see it carried out, and any others in West Fife who would care to take part in such might arrange to hold a field day this summer. I will only be too pleased to answer any question which "Unflighted" may care to ask.

Monthly meeting held Mar. 28, at headquarters, Mr. Batton in the chair. There was not a big gathering of members present, possibly owing to the Easter holiday and other attractions, otherwise a pleasant evening was spent, and a good deal of business got through. It was decided to hold a table show of British at our next meeting; judge, classes, and time will appear in CAGE BIRDS in due course. Several new members joined the society. Also five new committeemen were elected, which will make the work of the society more easy. The schedule for our first open show was almost completed.—R. Elliott, Sec.

PELTON FELL C.B.S.

Meeting held March 31, at the house of Mr. Enoch Waugh, Colliery Inn. Mr. J. Riseborough was elected judge for Nest Feather Show, July 19. Two judges were appointed for annual show, December 6th. Mr. Hands, Ryton-on-Tyne, Canaries, and Mr. Riseborough, Sunderland, the remainder. Moved and carried that we give 3s. for best young Canary, and 2s. second best, at N.F. Show, also 3s. best British bird, and 2s. 2nd best. Mr. J. Stanger gives 2s. 6d. for most points in Canary section, and Mr. Wm. Davison 2s. 6d. for most points in British, donors not competing. So members, nip in and see if we can't have a grand show when time comes round. We would be glad to see a few more at our meetings. More members welcome; subs. 5s. per year, and 1s. entrance. Remember, we are one of the oldest societies in the North, and still going well.—Wm. Forster, Sec.

NORTH MANCHESTER C.B.S.

Meeting held March 26, at the Balmoral Hotel, Mr. Robinson in the chair. Mr. J. Beswick, the well-known Stockport fancier, gave a most interesting lecture on British and Mules, which everyone enjoyed; many questions were asked, and Mr. Beswick answered all in a practical manner. Messrs. Jackson, Robinson, Whittaker, and others joined in the debate. At the close a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the lecturer. A letter was read from the Secretary of Clithero and Dis. C.B.S., offering to show our members round when we have our picnic on June 28th. The members desired the secretary to thank Mr. Southworth and invite him to join us on that date, telling him what arrangements we had made.—John Davey, Hon. Sec.

SCOTTISH PLAINHEAD CLUB.

The Annual General Meeting.

Annual general meeting held in Rooms, 142, High Street, Edinburgh, March 22, Mr. W. Aitchison, president, in the chair. The financial statement was then considered. Mr. Winter called attention to the special donations, and asked why they had not been included in the special prize fund, and secretary explained these donations had been received after the special prize fund had been disbursed. Mr. Sloan asked why the secretary's salary was not shown in statement, and was told that secretary had received no salary, owing to heavy loss on club show. Ultimately it was decided to pay the secretary £2 as remuneration for his year's work. The financial statement was then passed. Regarding the loss on club show, Mr. Barron thought that competition might be stimulated, were the club to procure one, two, or three trophies, to be competed for at the patronage shows. Mr. Winter thought the club might adopt the Scottish Crest Club's method with benefit to the members. After full and free discussion, Mr. Barron was asked to think out his scheme of trophies, and lay the same before the first meeting of committee for consideration. Medals won during the past year were presented to the winners present. Voting for office-bearers for 1913 was declared as under:—West: J. Young (24), J. McLay (20), W. Bishop (18), E. Barron (17), A. Sloan (14), C. Campbell (13); East and South: A. G. Cameron (28), W. Aitchison (27), J. Winter (26), J. Smeaton (19), J. Holmes (18), A. Fleming (15); North: J. Hector (24), G. Mitchell (21), W. Grewar (18), A. G. Forrest (17), T. Adamson (12), A. Harris (13). Judges: J. McLay (21), A. G. Cameron (20), A. Chalmers (15), G. Mitchell (14), J. Smeaton (14), C. Campbell (11); auditors: A. Maxwell (30), J. Peters (24); scrutineers: A. Miller (8), F. Taylor (4); sec. and treasurer, J. Brown (31). Mr. G. G. Henderson, who had acted as scrutineer for several years, wrote asking to be excused from accepting this year, which was agreed to, and secretary instructed to write Mr. Henderson thanking him for his services to the club. The following were admitted to membership:—W. Barrie and A. Hedley, Glasgow; J. Kerr, Keith; A. W. Naismith, Muirend; and W. C. Smith, Balquhidder. Mr. Grewar moved and the chairman seconded that a vote of the members be taken next year as to whether or not the closed ring be adopted, which was agreed to. The undernoted are names of medal winners during the show season: Gold medals at club show, W. Aitchison for best cock, and W. Grewar for best hen; silver medals, R. Martin, T. S. Mabon, A. Harris, W. Grewar, G. Mitchell, J. Smeaton, J. C. Murray, A. Fleming, W. Aitchison, W. Bishop, G. Steven, H. Thomson, L. Will, W. Hampton, W. Allison, A. M. Gardiner, D. Smart, A. Maxwell, W. R. Finnie, A. Sloan, R. Craig. Novice medal at club show was won by J. Bryson. The half guinea specials competed for at Aberdeen and Scottish National shows were won by the donor, W. Aitchison. The two novice prizes competed for throughout the series of patronage shows were won by D. Harper, 60 points, and J. McLeod, 46. The meeting terminated with a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman. I shall be pleased to hear from any Plainhead fanciers wishing to join the club, and will furnish particulars of membership with pleasure. T. Brown, Sec., 339, Duke Street, Glasgow.

CHESTER C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held Mar. 25, at Headquarters, Mr. F. C. Barnes in the chair. First feather show was fixed for July 9. Schedule, etc., to be drawn up at next meeting. Will all members kindly endeavour to attend? Quite a pleasing feature of the meeting was the enrolling of seven new members. Anyone intending joining can have full particulars from Hon. Sec. Membership, 4/ per annum.—R. L. G. Simpson, 35, Clare Avenue, Hoole, Chester.

LEIGH ROLLER CLUB

Adjourned meeting, held March 29th, at the Globe Inn, Bradshawgate, Leigh, when owing to the very bad weather, the attendance was not up to expectation. We decided to again adjourn until April 12, when we shall meet to draw up rules and elect officers. We enrolled four more very prominent Roller fanciers, and they seemed pleased with the prospects of the club. Will all members and intending members kindly note that our next meeting will be on Saturday, April 12th, at the Globe Inn, Bradshawgate, Leigh, at 7.30 sharp.—J. McAllister (Sec. pro tem.).

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

A table show of Goldfinches and Rollers was held March 19. Mr. H. Brown judged the former, and had the largest class yet staged at any of our table shows. We must congratulate the members on bringing out their birds, and trust it will prove an incentive to others to beat this record at future shows. The competition was very hot, and many of the birds were of equal merit, consequently at the judging competition which followed none succeeded in placing the birds in the same order as Mr. Brown. Mr. Luther Short brought some of his winning Rollers, all of which opened out. The tours and notes were explained by Mr. Short, who was congratulated upon his winning a cup at the late International Roller Show. Arrangements were made for the annual dinner on April 2, when it is hoped all members will endeavour to attend.—A. T. Treasure, Hon. Sec.

DUNFERMLINE C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held in the Co-operative Hall, March 29, Mr. J. Rankine (president) in the chair. The principal item for the evening was the exhibition of the fine collection of wild seeds belonging to Mr. J. S. Clarke, Rothesay. We were pleased to see the many friends who took advantage of seeing this collection, and to hear the very able article specially written for us by Mr. Clarke. Each seed in the case, and there were some ninety varieties, had full attention paid to it, the author paying great heed to the medicinal value as well as the feeding properties of these wayside plants: new light was thrown upon old favourites, and fresh ground broken to not a few, the outcome being that a well-arranged wild seed expedition will find consideration from the executive in the near future.—Robert T. Campbell, Sec.

TREDEGAR C.B.S.

Annual meeting held Mar. 25, when a large attendance of members and visitors witnessed a washing exhibition of Canaries by Mr. George Gregory, Mountain Ash. Mr. Gregory was introduced to the members and visitors by the chairman, Mr. E. Powell, as one of the most successful breeders and exhibitors of the Yorkshire Canary in Wales. He took plenty of time in washing the birds, and explained the method of holding the bird, also as to temperature of water. After the washing was over he was asked several questions by the fanciers present, which he answered satisfactorily. A pleasant afternoon was spent, and all the fanciers were highly pleased with the information they received from Mr. Gregory in regard to the management, breeding, and exhibiting of cage birds. A hearty vote of thanks was unanimously carried. Mr. Gregory responded, stating that he was only too pleased to impart to novices any information in his possession.—W. B. Watkins, Sec.

LONDON AND COUNTIES A.C.B.

Mr. G. Gardner's Views on Norwich Plainheads.

Meeting held at headquarters, "Earl Cathcart," Osnaburgh Street, N.W., March 15th. Lecture on Norwich Plainhead by Mr. G. Gardner. Mr. Gardner began by saying the Norwich Plainhead needs not much introduction. The subject is old and well worn, and one finds it very difficult to bring forward anything fresh. This last six months, he said, I've made up my mind to try and set men thinking. The novice nowadays is a much pampered individual. You can pamper him too much; he gets into a way of dogging footsteps, for which you cannot blame him; it is certain you cannot draw water from a dry cistern. The novice must get thinking for himself; fortunes are not going begging. He reads books, and lectures, and addresses; he himself knows nothing about the subject, and therefore makes mistakes. What he should do is to listen to no one, but rely on his own efforts, otherwise he will be out of the running. If he selects the Norwich Plainhead as a variety, the best thing to do is to make himself thoroughly acquainted with what it is. In the first place, it is a bird of shape. You must find out what the true shape should be: there are certain to be different opinions on the exactitude of same. It should not be a long-tailed, upstanding bird, not a bird that lifts itself high, not squatty, must not hug the perch, it should cross the perch at a nice angle, should not have a great fat chest, as it is easy to produce that by feeding on hemp seed. I have been surprised to see recently at the open and pair shows that men of long experience preferred the fat chest. They gave first prizes to birds that I didn't consider were worth 10s.; they were thick to extra degree because of fatness; it is departing from the uniform bird. I want nice rounded chests, those which carry shape backwards and forwards from perch, not boat-shaped; short tail, short wings and flights; long tail is an abomination. The head provoked a great deal of discussion and criticism a year or two ago. Latterly, the birds shown had improved in this respect. I like a nice rounded head, short feather round the eyes, clean away from gullet, with a closely fitting body feather on back nicely over flights. Don't get open shoulders; you can avoid this by breeding class feather. In buff you don't get the open shoulder, in yellow you do; what you want above everything is feather to produce buff texture on yellow in the same quality as on buff, or you will be behind in the race. Look along the feather; I like those with a dent in the middle, the same feather in yellow as in buff, and that is bound to be near the top. If you look around the novice classes you see the class of bird that has been picked up from the waste basket of older breeders. Do not buy cheap birds at selling classes. These birds are nothing but a delusion and snare for the novice. Take it from me, get it in your head what a Norwich Plainhead should be in shape, feather, and colour. Get this rammed in, and use your own judgment. If you make a mistake, get up and have another try. Don't ask everybody, and when you have got birds right, stick to the strain. If you are doing fairly well, breed closely; don't be afraid of father and daughter, or sister and brother, and so on. I don't say keep it on for a considerable time; if you want a change of blood for stamina, take care never to buy a bird unless you can learn something of the pedigree. Don't be content by looking at a bird and saying, "That is just the bird I want." There may be a "dud" from good parents, and many a winner from offcasts. Middling pairs may throw a winner; you don't know what is at the back of them. It may be residue of strain. The novice will gain more when buying by asking the tops and bottoms and everything he can about the bird. Don't be stalled off. Have 20s. worth for a £1, or go elsewhere. It is no use saying the Norwich Plainhead should be this, that, and the other; this is the old tale. Ask what the parents were. I can trace my birds back for ten generations, and know exactly what to do with the tenth. What I say, in conclusion, is, don't ask somebody else. Sit down and think for yourselves. You must have the feather, shape, and know exactly what are the antecedents. Several questions were put to Mr. Gardner, which were answered to everyone's satisfaction.—G. G. Stubbs, Hon. Sec.

MUSSELBURGH O.S.

Monthly meeting held at Cossar's Tea Rooms, Mar. 29th; president, Mr. A. Moffat in the chair. The replies of judges were read, and the following gentlemen were elected to judge at our show on December 6th:—Norwich, Mr. J. Winter, Edinburgh; Borders, Mr. G. Hislop, Stirling; Mules and British, Mr. L. J. Arrighi, Edinburgh. The classification was read over, and it was agreed to add two more Norwich variegated classes, and a Bullfinch hen, and Greenfinch field-moulted classes to the British section, making the total of 50 classes. Agreed to leave the Scotch Fancy classes out. Mr. J. Kirkland was elected as a new member.—A. Hoyle, Sec.

SOWERBY BRIDGE C.B.S.

Annual meeting held March 27, before a moderate attendance of members. The secretary, Mr. J. E. Sutcliffe, read the report and balance-sheet, which was a very good one considering the heavy expenses the society has been put to during the season. The season was started with a balance of £1 1s. 7d. Receipts have been £11 16s. 9½d., making the total receipts for the year £12 18s. 4½d.; expenses, £10 17s. 0½d.; leaving a cash balance of £2 1s. 4d., which is excellent considering that we have only 30 good financial members. Exhibits at the series of shows have totalled 455 birds, shown by 24 exhibiting members. The report and balance-sheet was unanimously carried. The best thanks were given to the retiring officers for their able services, and ably replied to by Mr. J. E. Sutcliffe, secretary, who thanked them for kindness, and said that he wished to resign as secretary. His resignation was accepted with regret. Mr. A. Sutcliffe (president) also replied, thanking the members for their kind support that had been given to all the officers, and said he was sorry to lose the secretary as he had been a willing worker, and he was sure they could not get a better man for the position. He had been ably supported by Mr. T. Walker, assist.-sec. Officers for 1913 and 1914 were elected as follows:—Mr. J. Robertshaw, pres.; Mr. E. Stobart and Mr. C. Pickles, vice-pres.; Mr. E. Crossley, treas.; Mr. A. Sutcliffe, sec.; Messrs. F. Walker, J. E. Sutcliffe, T. Magson, committee for two years; Messrs. L. Turner, H. Brandwood, and G. Mitchell for one year; Mr. W. Wild, steward; Messrs. W. Highley and F. Walker, auditors.—Archie Sutcliffe, Sec.

SHETTLESTON C.B.S.

First annual social was held March 15, in Johnston's Hall. The hall was beautifully arranged, and about 50 members and friends sat down to a splendid tea, which was excellently purveyed. The duties of the chairman were discharged by Mr. Lunn, president of the society, who briefly referred to the present prosperous state of the society. Songs and recitations were given in grand style to an appreciative audience by Mr. J. Mackay, Mr. Gibson, Mr. R. Mackay, Mr. Yule, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Williams, Mr. Tennant, Mr. Black, Mr. Hood, Mr. Carrack. Instrumental music of very high class was supplied by Mr. Johnstone. At the close votes of thanks were awarded to all who had helped in the evening's entertainment. The evening was an outstanding success.—A. Berry, Sec.

CITY OF BRADFORD O.S.

Meeting held at Flying Dutchman Hotel, March 22. About twenty members attended, a fair muster considering the wretched weather which prevailed. Mr. Morement presided. The principal business was classification, nomination, and election of judges for the season's shows. Four new members were made—Messrs. E. Riley, H. Lund, J. Bolton, and R. Bunney. We are likely to add a good many more new members before the season closes. Sir George Scott Robertson, K.C.S.I., M.P., has again kindly consented to stand as pres., and said he would be delighted to attend our next annual show, Parliamentary duties permitting. P. N. Jenkinson, Assist. Sec. (Kindly note that matter intended for publication must be written on one side only of each sheet of paper used.—Ed.)

SWINDON F. AND F.A.

Monthly meeting, held at the Baths, March 26. Present, Messrs. H. R. Halliday (chair), A. Ireland, W. Thane, J. T. Edmonds, C. Bridgeman, W. Townsend, H. A. Northover, E. Jefferies, D. Hoare, F. Ireland, A. J. Parker, S. Lewis, W. Brooks, and W. J. Moran. New member elected: Mr. T. J. Jervis, Swindon. Mr. E. Wallington was elected to the vacant seat on the committee. It was decided to alter the date of our young stock show to October 25th, as we could not have the hall on the date arranged; the arrangements to be left in the hands of the committee. Mr. J. T. Edmonds gave a very interesting paper on Foreign Cage Birds, explaining the best species that a novice should take up, and also showed samples of the different foods, and explained the best way to feed the birds. At the close Mr. Edmonds was accorded a very hearty vote of thanks, and in response mentioned that he would be only too pleased to give us another on a vacant date. Next meeting will be held at the Baths, April 30, when Mr. Ireland will give us a paper on pigeons; fanciers heartily invited.—W. J. Moran, Hon. Sec.

NORTH WALES C.B.S.

Meeting held March 29, at committee rooms, in the Assembly Rooms, Market-street, Carnarvon, Mr. James Jones chair. There was a fair attendance. The chairman begs that the committee will attend better in the future, so that they can do a bit more work. A first feather show for members only will be held in June or the beginning of July, but the date is not yet fixed. All members of the past should rejoin at once. The meeting was held to elect new officials, etc., for the year. The following gentlemen were elected, the election of president and vice-pres. being held over till next meeting. Chair, Mr. James Jones; vice, Mr. Geo. Jones. Committee passed a vote of thanks to these gentlemen for their kind services during 1912. Treas., Mr. R. T. Edwards, a very keen Norwich exhibitor of many years ago, who is now coming to the Fancy again. We all wish him a long life and success. Hon. sec., Mr. R. E. Griffith, late treas., who also received a vote of thanks for past services. Committee, Messrs. Edward Jones, J. O. Parry, J. W. Jones, Capt. Williams, Hugh Williams, R. Green, John Pritchard, Evan Hughes. Mr. John Wynne Parry, late sec., was added as a member of the committee, after receiving a vote of thanks for past services. Will the above committee kindly note that they have been elected, and make it a point to attend all meetings if possible, so that they can do some business to help the society. There will be a meeting held on April 5 at the above committee rooms at 6., committee only. I would like to entice a few members to join at once. For further particulars write to the new hon. sec., Mr. R. E. Griffith, 5, Balaclava-road, Carnarvon.

NATIONAL BRITISH BIRD & M.C.

Committee meeting, held at headquarters, the "Feathers" Hotel, Gt. Chapel Street, Westminster, March 27. Present, Messrs. J. Robson (chairman), A. Silver, G. E. Weston, H. J. Fulljames, E. Stephens, O. Puck, T. R. Trower, J. Dewhurst, G. Mortlock, R. A. Newley, C. T. Maxwell, G. Crabb, A. C. Askew, and J. P. Carr; visitor, Mr. James Livingstone. A letter was read from Messrs. Nicholls, Herbert and Co., stating that they would be pleased to allow the firm's name to appear as hon. solicitors to the club for the ensuing year. Mr. Weston promised to ascertain the cost of printing the diploma in black and white, and report to the next meeting. Mr. Livingstone was asked to leave the room pending the arrival at a decision whether or not to entertain the matter dealing with the Bullfinch disqualified at Bathgate Show. The Hon. Sec. read the correspondence that had passed between the owner, Mr. Parlett, and himself. Also a letter he had received from Mr. Alex. Nicol, Bathgate, stating that he had sent Mr. Parlett's Bullfinch to be tested by the committee of the N.B.B. and M. Club. The Hon. Sec. stated that he had had no communication whatever from the Bathgate Society until he received Mr. Nicol's letter and the Bullfinch on the 25th inst., therefore there was no time to communicate with the committee to ascertain their views as to dealing with the matter. After the matter was fully discussed, the following resolution was carried without dissent: "That this club cannot see its way to take action in the matter, seeing that the owner of the bird is not a member of this club, and that the show was not held under its patronage." Mr. Livingstone was then asked into the room, and the resolution was read. Mr. Livingstone expressed his satisfaction at the decision arrived at by the committee. Mr. Puck placed before the committee a "meating off" cage for Nightingales, of his own design. This opened a very interesting discussion on the caging and feeding of Softbills. A very hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Puck for bringing the cage, and for the very interesting discussion it had opened. The annual ramble was fixed for Saturday, 24th May, Epping Forest being the place selected; the necessary arrangements being left in the hands of Mr. Puck and the Hon. Sec., and will be announced at a later date. Mr. James Livingstone, Bathgate, and Mr. Heven, Greenwich, were elected members. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the meeting.—J. P. Carr, Hon. Sec.

ARBROATH C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held March 26th, Shepherd's Rooms, Millgate, Mr. W. Muir presided over a very large attendance of members, all eager to make this a record year for the society. We enrolled another five members, making up a grand total in the society. Mr. J. F. Dewar and W. Mosie were appointed judges for open show. The financial position of the society was considered satisfactory. Several minor matters were decided upon, and the meeting was brought to a close with a vote of thanks to the chairman. J. Gray, Sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Meeting held March 29th, Mr. C. Waters presiding. It was agreed to hold our open show Jan. 16 and 17, 1914. The election of judges was left over till next meeting, when it is hoped that all the members will make a special effort to be present. A vote of thanks was expressed to Mr. Jeffery, our late secretary, and to Mr. A. Walker, our late treasurer, for their past services, on behalf of the club. The new secretary's address is: 16, East Whickham Street, Monkwearmouth. T. Davison, Sec.

LOCHGELLY C.B.S.

Meeting held in the Drill Hall, Mar. 19th, Mr. T. Wildridge presiding. Judges for open show were appointed as follows: — S. Fancy, Geo. Fulton, Partick; Bord., H. Besset, Kelso; Crests and C.B., Wm. Paul, Uphall; Nor. Plainheads, A. G. Cameron, Kelso; British and Mules, R. Bald, Bathgate. The Yorks. section is not yet settled. The secretary was instructed to write Mr. J. Steel, Dalkeith, anent a lecture on British birds, to be held if convenient on Saturday, 12th April. Ramble has been fixed for Monday, June 2nd, to Raith Estate.—R. Muir, Sec.

PLYMOUTH (W. Counties) O.S.

Monthly general meeting was held at Oddfellows' Hall, Plymouth, March 18. Mr. W. C. Dart presided over a good attendance. A presentation of a marble clock was made to Mr. Chas. Garland, who for many years has largely helped the annual shows by obtaining special prizes. A judging competition of Goldfinches was held, the birds being judged by points, according to the standard set out in CAGE BIRDS 1913 ANNUAL. Two new members were proposed, making the total membership up to 71. The next meeting will be held on April 15th, when a judging competition of Linnets will be held, and Mr. J. E. Rowe will give a paper.—Thos. Pope, Hon. Sec.

EAST PERTHSHIRE O.A.

Fifth annual general meeting held in Temperance Hotel, Blairgowrie, March 15, Mr. Thos. Menzies (vice-pres.) presided over a good attendance. The secretary and treasurer's report showed that the 1912 show was the most successful yet held, although none of the sections paid their way with the exception of the poultry section. Notwithstanding the fact that there had been a loss on the year's working, there was still a balance in favour of association. Office-bearers elected: President, Mr. Chas. H. Scott; vice-president, Mr. Thos. Menzies; hon. sec. and treas., M. Irvine, 17, Brown-street, Blairgowrie; committee, Messrs. A. Anderson, D. R. Butchart, A. Blaikie, A. Moir, D. Adams, R. Irvine, W. Reid, J. Keay, jun., J. Skinner, J. Prain, W. Bryce, and J. Rogers. 1913 show fixed 22nd Nov.; committee to meet on 12th April to arrange classification and nominate judges.—M. Irvine, Hon. Sec.

CLYDEBANK C.B.C.

Monthly meeting held in Higgin's Hall on March 20th, Mr. McGown presiding over a good attendance. A letter was read from Mr. Campbell that he would be unable to give us a washing exhibition as arranged that night, but promising that he would do so any other night that would suit us. Agreed to hold F.F. show June 28th, annual show on Nov. 1. Also agreed that we hold our annual show on the first Saturday in November every year. The secretary and treasurer were appointed to look after the same ball as we had last year. Agreed to advertise annual show for two weeks previous in the Fancy press, and also the local press. The secretary was instructed to write to Mr. Greer and ask him if he could get permission for a ramble through Erskine Estate for a Saturday in May. A committee was appointed to revise the rules. Ten new members were elected. The meeting closed with a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman.—William Kane, Sec.

EDINBURGH AND DIST. C B.S.

Monthly meeting held in Cairns Memorial Hall, Gorgie Road, March 18. Mr. A. W. Watson occupied the chair, a large number of members being present. The secretary intimated that he had been successful in securing the Tynecastle Hall for annual show. Four new members were elected, Messrs. T. Brosh, Wm. Dodds, Wm. Colburn, and Mr. Taylor. The classification for April table show then came up for discussion. It was unanimously agreed that it be the same as last year, with an extra [illegible] the classes to run as follows: Goldfinch (British or Foreign), Linnet, Bunting, Softbill, Siskin, Redpoll or Twite, any variety Finch, Bullfinch hen (British or foreign), Mules. Mr. Sykes, Musselburgh, kindly consented to judge. Entry fee 2d. per bird. No other business being forward, the President introduced Mr. Steel, of Dalkeith, to the members, who had kindly consented to answer questions on "British Mules and Hybrids." About twenty questions were handed up to Mr. Steel, and he very ably replied to all of them. The President moved a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Steel for coming that evening, which was heartily responded to. This brought a very instructive and successful meeting to a close.—J. C. Charlton, Sec.

SMALLBRIDGE C.B.S.

Smoking concert held at headquarters, Garside-street, March 12, Mr. E. Hartley in the chair. A good muster of friends present, but not as many of our own members as I should have liked. As a concert it was a success, but attendance was poor, which I put down to sickness, as there is a lot knocking about here at present, and I take this opportunity to wish a speedy recovery of all our sick members and friends. About 30 persons listened to a capital programme, the contributors to which were: Mr. Windle, Littleboro', tenor; Mr. Hartley, Hursted, tenor; Mr. Schofield, Rochdale, baritone; Mr. Walton and Mr. Merchant, comedians and ragtime singers, Rochdale; also a few choice selections on a good gramophone. Mr. Crossley (Littleboro') efficiently fulfilled the duties of accompanist. The singing was greatly appreciated, and we hope to have another of these gatherings at an early date, as they are beneficial both to the members themselves and to the club, and tend to bring more members to the fold for the good and welfare of the society and the hobby. Mr. Hartley proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the artistes. This was seconded by Mr. Cheetham with a few remarks, and carried in usual manner. An enjoyable evening was brought to a close with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and "God Save the King," all standing.—J. T. Cheetham, Hon. Sec.

The Norwich Worth Prizing, and How to Get It.

Messrs. Boothman and Robinson entertain and instruct the members and friends of the Ardwick and Manchester C.B.S.

Meeting and lecture held in the Onward Hall, March 18, when a large number of members and friends were present to hear Mr. Boothman and Mr. Robinson give their lecture on the Norwich Canary. Previous to lecture we went through our usual business, Mr. Robinson being in the chair, assisted by our President (Dr. Twigg). Three new members were proposed, and three came up for confirmation from previous meeting, so we are going with a swing which promises success for the coming season. We also fixed date of our first feather show for July 12. Mr. Boothman, on being called to give us the lecture, said that probably there were some present who knew more about birds than he did, but he promised to give this lecture with the idea of trying to give the novices some good advice and put them on the right way to success. He stated that his ideal Norwich was as follows: Must have large head and not browy; face chubby and good cheeks; eyes bold and well set in centre of head; beak short and neat; neck short and stout; body large and nicely rounded, well cut away at back; wings short and close, meeting at tips; tail short and carried well without drop; nice feather and jaunty carriage. A bird like this he thought would be worth prizing. He strongly advised the novices to go to a reliable fancier and put themselves in his hands and mind and note the pedigree of the birds bought. It was not necessary to buy winners, but they must buy birds of good blood. He believed in getting the pair from the same fancier. In pairing up he liked the hen as near a show bird as possible; medium size, and not small unless bred from big stock, with good head and nice shape and quality. The cock bird large and of nice type. He did not mind him being a bit rough, but it must not be browy, and must have good colour; a marked bird to be preferred, as he thought one marked helped to keep the colour up, and we all knew green blood is the fountain of colour. In selecting a breeding pair he strongly advised us to be careful to get size and colour in the cock, and quality and type in the hen. Mr. Boothman stated he would not touch on colour-feeding, as there were several methods, but he strongly advised those who had a good feed to stick to it, and not change about, as it would surely bring disaster. He was a great believer in green food, especially dandelion, as it helped to keep the liver in good condition, and he always used it during breeding and moulting season, as it was one of Nature's foods. Mr. Robinson, on being called, stated he would not give a lecture, as we all knew his ideal Norwich, but he was going to put several questions to the lecturer to make it more instructive. The first question asked was as to the lecturer's ideas of double buffing. Mr. Boothman, in reply, stated he would not double buff without a reason, but he did not think we got size in body, but only appeared to, because of the broader feather which we got, and his idea of birds for double buffing would be to have birds very tight in feather and very clean behind; the cock not to be browy, and both to be nice type and colour; a marked bird to be preferred. The hens from such breeding would be of good service. Mr. Robinson also stated his experiences of double buffing, mentioning that we must do away with frosting, as we lose colour with such. He paired a green variegated cock to a clear buff hen, and got a grand hen from same, which he had double buffed with for four seasons, and she had always bred good feathered birds with good colour. He had had also several yellows from double buffing. Next Mr. Robinson asked the lecturer for his ideas of double yellowing. In reply, he stated he had not done much of this, and he would only do so with two birds of good size with very little feather, and they must be teeming with quality; if not, he thought we would get long and scanty birds with very bad feather. In reply to a question as to inbreeding, he stated he was a great believer in inbreeding in fixing different points, and would prefer to do same with show specimens. That is, if they had not been overshown, and had thereby had the stamina taken out of them. The nearest he would care to go would be to pair cousins, but with birds he knew something about he would not mind father and daughter, or mother and son, if the specimens were medium to large. He did not mind a small one if well bred, but he would be very chary of breeding with birds with weak head, etc. We must use discretion in all the above points, and must know our stock. Several other questions were asked, and all were answered in grand style. Time being up, a vote of thanks was proposed by Mr. Downing and seconded by Mr. Swanell to the lecturer and Mr. Robinson, who ably responded, and so ended a most enjoyable and instructive evening.—R. Booth, Press Correspondent.

ANNFIELD PLAIN C.B.S.

Meeting held at Mr. Snowdon's, March 29th, Mr. Jos. Robson in the chair, when there was a small attendance of members, probably through it being a very wet night. We enrolled two new members—Messrs. J. Teasdale and W. Soulsby. Mr. W. H. Butler was elected judge for our young bird show June 21, for which we have 21 classes. Mr. W. Reid (Sunderland) was elected judge for our annual show Dec. 20. Mr. Hannighan has kindly offered to lend us a room free to hold young bird show, which will save the society expense.—R. Peart, Sec.

CINNAMON-MARKED Y.C.C.

The annual general meeting will be held April 12th at the Market Tavern, Bradford, at 7 p.m., and I want all members and intending members to attend, as very important alterations are likely to be made in the constitution of our club. Secretaries of societies holding open winter shows who would care to have our patronage, should write me before April 12th, stating the number of classes they will have in their schedule for cinn. marked Yorks., as it is desirable to have our competitions settled earlier than in previous years. I have only two applications at present—Bradford National and Sheffield—and we want ten shows at least. Any member wishing to bring any business before the meeting, and not being able to attend, may write me, and I will bring it before the meeting.—R. Garnett, Sec.

BRADFORD EAST O.S.

ANNUAL BIRD FANCIERS' SUNDAY SERVICE.

The officials and members of the above society wish to draw the attention of all fanciers and friends to the annual fanciers' service to be held at Park Chapel, West Bowling, Bradford, on Sunday, April 6th, service to commence at six o'clock. We are desirous of seeing a good attendance of fanciers on this occasion as a welcome to the new pastor, the Rev. H. Parrish, whose sympathies and deepest interest in the Fancy and fanciers have already been shown in no half-hearted manner to our members. The service will be a bright and cheerful one, and several fanciers will take a prominent part in it. Mrs. F. Hammond has very kindly consented to sing two sacred solos during the service. Members of the society will gladly welcome any fanciers or friends, and one and all trust that this will prove one of the best services held since the innovation was started. Will members of the society kindly turn up in full force and show their personal sympathy with the cause. Kindly note the time, six o'clock. —H. Hill, Secretary.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

Annual general council meeting held at the Market Tavern, Godwin Street, Bradford, March 29th, before a capital attendance of delegates. Mr. F. Armstrong, president, occupied the chair. Bankfoot and Dis. C.B.S. applied for admission as members of the Union, and this was unanimously granted. Mr. J. W. Ramsden's offer of prizes to members of the Union using his noted colour-feed was heartily accepted with thanks. Brighouse and Dis. C.B.S. tendered their resignation as members of the Union, and this was accepted with much regret, the society having made a splendid struggle against odds. The scrutineers, Messrs. R. Wilkinson and C. E. Walker, submitted the result of the annual ballot to the council, and a hearty vote of thanks was accorded them. In respect to the new rule passed by the annual ballot that the Union novice competition be divided into two periods, it was proposed that the sec. should notify the winners of novice medals in the first half of the season individually as soon as possible after the half-way show is over. The treas. (Mr. F. Hammond) gave his report, and read the balance sheet for the past year, this showing a small deficit on the year's working. The balance sheet was unanimously adopted by the council. Messrs. R. Halliday and F. Armstrong gave the auditors' report as to finding the Union books and all accounts in perfect order. An honorarium was granted to the secretary for his services during the past year, and Mr. Hill suitably responded to same, and thanked the council for their appreciation of his services. A vote of thanks to all retiring officers was unanimously carried, and the retiring president, Mr. F. Armstrong and the treasurer, Mr. F. Hammond, capably responded, each taking the opportunity of thanking the council for the help and support tendered to them during their term of office. Delegates' expenses for the past year were paid over. Will secretaries of societies connected with the Union, who have not as yet notified me who the delegates are for the ensuing year, kindly send their names and addresses without delay, in order that I can make arrangements for the first meeting of the new council.—H. Hill, Sec.

EAST HAM C.B.S.

General meeting held at headquarters, March 26th, T. Walker, Esq., in the chair. The meeting was followed by a lecture by Mr. J. Robson on "Pairing and Breeding." There was a large muster of members and friends, and a very pleasant evening was spent. Various questions were asked, and were ably answered by the lecturer. Mr. F. Fox proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Robson; this was seconded by Mr. A. J. Marley, and a very pleasant evening was brought to a close.—F. Onslow, Hon. Assist. Sec.

NORTH MANCHESTER C.B.S.

Meeting held March 11, Mr. J. Robinson in the chair. We had the pleasure of a lecture on Norwich, by Mr. W. Robinson. He gave his idea of the breed, and impressed it most clearly on the novices to get the best bird their pockets would allow, and to pay particular attention to the head properties, these being one of the most essential points; also to get birds with a good bold front. It was quite an enjoyable evening. Messrs. Jackson, Jones, Pike, Colley, Robinson, and others asked questions, which were readily answered by the lecturer. Mr. J. Robinson proposed that the best thanks be given to the lecturer; this was seconded by Mr. Whittaker and carried in the usual way.—John S. T. Davey, Hon. Sec.

EAST BOWLING B.F.A.

A very enjoyable evening was spent in St. John's School on March 20. Mr. Cowell presided over a good attendance, owing to the unavoidable absence of Mr. L. Hodgson, who was to have given his lecture on breeding. Mr. Hodgson's absence was a disappointment to the members present; however, great credit is due to Mr. Casey and Mr. Helliwell for stepping into the breach and entertaining the members with their experiences on breeding, both giving some good advice, which was much appreciated by all present, especially the novice members. Messrs. Sharp, Gledhill, and Firth also joined in the discussion, after which came the presentation of prizes to the exhibitors having gained most points for 1912:—Open Section: 1, W. Helliwell; 2, C. Padgett; 3, W. Bleazard. Novice Section: 1, F. Hinton; 2, and rose bowl for most points in certain classes, Messrs. Hodgson and Holdsworth, after a tie with W. Helliwell; 3, Wilkinson and Son. A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturers and our worthy president brought the meeting to a close.—L. Booth, Sec.

FIFE & KINROSS NORWICH P.C.

Meeting held Mar. 29th, T. Wildridge (pres.) in the chair. After a lengthy discussion it was agreed that rings be adopted, but not compulsory. Rings only to be got through the club secretary. Members not present, or any one who intends joining should write me at once enclosing 1d. for each ring they require (this must be done at once, so that first round can be rung). The secretary to keep a record of the rings used. I cannot see why this club is not better supported by the Plainhead fanciers in Fife and Kinross, as I am sure there are over 200 breeders in these two counties. Our special prize list can bear comparison with any specialist club. Our list is as follows for 1913, and likely to be largely increased:—Cup and gold medal for most points over all shows; 5s. 2nd; 5s. 3rd; 5s. 4th; 5s. 5th; medal 6th; 2s. 6d. most points one show; 2s. 6d. ditto different show; 2s. 6d. ditto; 2s. 6d. ditto; shows to be named afterwards when patronage given; 2s. 6d. best young bird; also another special not placed yet. We also give eight medals, and this year intend to grant four extra for novices. With a prize list like this no one should be afraid to join, and it is to their interest to do so, as only by joining a specialist club can they expect to succeed in the Fancy. Now Plainhead men in Fife and Kinross see if we can build up one of the strongest clubs in our own particular breed. 2s. 6d. is the annual subscription, and any one requiring particulars can have them by applying to me. New members joined: P. Langan and G. B. Sinclair (Cowdenbeath).—A. Dickson, Sec., 37, Adams Terrace, Kelty, Fife.

DARWEN F.A.

Meeting held Mar. 25, Mr. G. W. Harwood in chair. Decided to remove the radius; members please note this. Any person wishing to join please apply to Secretary, J. C. Riley, 144, Sough Road, Darwen, for particulars and rules. All sections in dogs, poultry, pigeons, rabbits, cats, cavies, and cage birds provided for.—J. C. Riley, Sec.

LONGTON C.B.S.

Meeting held March 28, Swan Hotel. Proposed, that Mr. J. H. Roe, of Birmingham, judge our annual open show on Oct. 4th; carried. We have started a Roller club as well, along with our society, and have had some nice specials promised for a singing contest, to be held on the second Tuesday in May, so all local fanciers of the Rollers who wish to join please come to the next meeting on April 8th at the Swan Hotel; we have three members already joined; the fee for the year is 2s. per member; we enrolled two more new members for our other society as well. It was then proposed that the schedule for the next feather show be the same as last year, with the exception that a Siskin, etc., class be put on instead of the Softbill, and that the old Hybrids and Mules and the F.M. Goldfinch class do not compete for the cup; carried. Also proposed that an equal number of classes throughout the Nor., Yorks and British, 5 in each, compete for the cup.—P. Barker, Hon. Sec.

ATTERCLIFFE C.B.S.

Meeting held March 13th at Horse and Jockey Hotel. Our president, Mr. Havenhand, presided over a good muster of members. Two new members were enrolled, showing that our society is still going ahead. A grand cup for competition among the novices was presented to the society by the committee. Then Mr. Browning was called upon to deliver his lecture on "Pairing and Breeding," a most appropriate subject for the season, and also exceedingly instructive for the novices present. There were also some good hints for old hands to pick up. The subject was ably and exhaustively dealt with, taking in cages—kind advocated, painting, enamelling, cleaning, etc. Then the lecturer went thoroughly into the pairing up, health of stock, and care of same from putting together to staging for next feather shows. The discourse was enjoyed by everybody, as was proved by the volley of questions fired at Mr. Browning at the close. He satisfied all enquirers, however, and our evening closed with a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer.—W. Hailstone, Sec.

The Shows.

SPRINGBURN, POSSIL PK., C.B.C

Monthly meeting and show of British birds held in Reid Hall. Mr. A. Sloan presided over a good attendance, and gave a special for best bird. Mr. A. Gordon, one of the members, said he would give a medal for most points from this show until the first feather show. Mr. T. Erskine judged, and many thanks are due him. LINNET: 1, Dunlop; 2, McMillan; 3, 4, Crawford. MEALY REDPOLL OR TWITE: 1, Dunlop. LESSER REDPOLL: 1, 2, Crawford; 3, Morrison; vhc, c, Dunlop; c, Taylor. BULLF. HEN: 1, sp, Taylor; 2, 3, Dunlop; vhc, McMillan; c, Morrison.—J. Waugh, Sec. and Treas.

GLASGOW AND WEST OF SCOTLAND M.B. AND F.B.C.

Monthly meeting and show of British birds in rooms, 94, West Regent-street, March 25, president Mr. M. Craig presiding. A splendid array of birds faced the judge, some birds of exceptional merit being on exhibition. The judging was in the capable hands of Mr. Hugh Jamieson, his awards being well received.

GOLDF. (12): A grand class: 1, 2, Morrine, leader champion black leg, expansive square cut blaze; 2nd, another black leg, not far behind; 3, Webster, extra fine exhibit, large size, little rough at throat; 4, Wallace, house-moulted, largest faced Britisher out, when in full bloom will trouble the best of them; 5, 6, Raines. BULLF. (10): A blaze of colour here; 1, Campbell, grand size, broad cap, rich col.; 2, Wallace, old winner, all there for col., not far behind; 3, Taylor, nice Bullie, not quite steady; 4, Sloan, nice Finch, grand size; 5, Taylor; 6, Chubb. GREENF.: 1, Campbell, extra large, grand col.; 2, 5, Craig, leader good one, in the pink; 3, Webster, grand fellow, field-moulted, will be heard of later. SISKIN: 1, Webster, grand yell., fine cap, extra good bib, in good condition; 2, Craig, well-known winner, fails in bib, hen; 3, Raines, loses a bit in condition. FOR. GOLDF. OR BULLF.: 1, Craig, grand Goldie, fine face and tanning; 2, Webster, good Finch, not far behind; 3, Wallace, Goldie, little broken in top of blaze, will make a champion, much admired. FOR., A.O.V.: 1, 2, Webster, winner Black-cheeked Lovebird, absolutely perfect in condition; 2nd, Diamond Sparrow, beauty; 3, 4, Park, Zebra Finches and Avadavats in sprightly condition and well staged. Medal for best exhibit was awarded to the British Goldie, and proved a popular win.—F. Taylor, Sec.

GLASGOW WEST END C.B.C.

Monthly meeting, held in the Co-op Hall (St. George's Cross), March 14, Mr. C. Campbell presiding over a good attendance. Correspondence re judges was read, and the President intimated that the services of the following well-known judges had been secured: F.F. Show, Mr. J. Young, Rutherglen; annual members' show, Canaries, Mr. J. McLay, Kirkintilloch; mules, British and foreign, Mr. R. V. Raine, Cathcart, Glasgow. Both shows will be held in the Co-operative Hall (St. George's Cross), F.F. show July 12, annual show November 15. Nine new members were enrolled, A. Innes, W. S. Bannerman, J. Sinclair, D. Law, Wm. Cochrane, D. Weatherhead, G. Corner, J. Walker, and G. Alexander. Twenty classes for F.F. show were fixed (same as last year). It is very pleasing to note that a large number of specials for F.F. show were intimated from the following gentlemen, P. Allan, W. Proudfoot, A. Gillespie, A. Miller, R. Prentice, J. J. Whyte, D. Lunn, J. Campbell, W. Campbell, G. G. Henderson, J. Stewart, and A. Hendry. Also specials for the British and foreign table show were kindly given by the following gentlemen: G. G. Henderson (3), P. Allan, C. Campbell, and A. Miller. Prize cards for February show were handed out to winners present. A table show of British and foreign birds was also held, entries being exceedingly well up, when some grand specimens were staged in the pink of condition, including some recent Palace and City winners; in fact, rarely has such a fine lot of birds been together at one time, "a richt braw lot." Mr. T. Erskine, Glasgow, judged, and his awards gave every satisfaction (many thanks to him for his kindness in coming to judge).

GOLD. OR BULL.: 1, 6, Henderson; 2, Gillespie; 3, sp., 4, sp., Allan; 5, Stewart. LIN.: 1, Henderson; 2, Prentice; 3, Stewart; 4, Gillespie; 5, Proudfoot. GREEN.: 1, sp., Stewart; 2, 5, Gillespie; 3, Henderson; 4, Allan; 6, Campbell. SISKIN OR TWITE: 1, Henderson; 2, sp., Stewart; 3, Prentice. REDPOLL: 1, Allan; 2, 4, Prentice; 3, Campbell; 5, Henderson. CHAFF. OR BRAMBLE.: 1, 2, Henderson; 3, Stewart; 4, Gillespie. A.V. BUNTING: 1, 2, Allan; 3, Henderson. FOR.: 1, sp., Proudfoot; 2, Henderson. HENS SUITABLE FOR HYB. BREEDING: 1, Whyte; 2, Campbell; 3, 4, Gillespie; 5, Proudfoot. Members please note that no meetings will be held in April or May. Next meeting June 13th. I would also remind members that subscriptions for the ensuing year are now due.—W. Proudfoot, Sec. and Treas., 145, Henderson Street, Glasgow.

LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

Monthly meeting held in Oldham Hall, Mar. 13th, Mr. J. Abbott in the chair. Four new members were elected, and seven nominated for membership, bringing our total to nearly 100. Afterwards we had a British bird night show. Mr. R. Bratherton judged in the absence of Mr. Mallinson. GOLDF.: 1, 2, Jones; 3, Eccleston. LINNET: 1, 3, Jones; 2, vhc, Bell. GREENF.: 1, Bell; 2, Lloyd; 3, Redpath. BRAMBLE: 1, Redpath; 2, Bell. Afterwards Mr. J. W. Metcalfe gave us a few remarks on the points to look for when buying British birds, and Mr. J. Lloyd gave us his views of steadying and getting same up for exhibition, which brought out a large number of questions and remarks. J. Lloyd, Assist. Sec.

BRIGHTON AND HOVE C.B.A.

Show held at headquarters March 12, when some fine birds were exhibited. Mr. W. Swayeland judged, and afterwards pointed out to the members where the winning exhibits scored over those behind them. Many useful hints were thus gained by those present. Awards were as follows:—YORKS.: 1, 2, Gibb; 3, vhc, hc, c, Dandridge. NOR.: 1, 2, Gibb. CREST OR C.B.: 1, Gibb. BRAMBLE, CHAFF, OR BUNTING: 1, 2, vhc, c, James; 3, hc, Gibb. REDPOLL OR SISKIN: 1, Plummer. LINNET OR TWITE: 1, Bignell. A.O.V. BRIT.: 1, vhc, hc, James; 2, Plummer; 3, Pazel; c, Gibb. BIRKENHEAD CANARY F.A.

A very successful night show of British birds was held at headquarters, March 18. The entry was a record one, novice members showing up well, and easily holding their own against the champions. In the soft-billed class Mr. E. R. Gaylard and Mr. N. Jones staged two lovely Starlings, steady as rocks and shining like glass, and new members who had never seen these birds in the show cage before were surprised at the spangling and beauty of them. The class for Buntings brought out a good variety, Mr. Barker taking premier honours with a lovely Reed. Mr. N. Jones's Yellow and Mr. Lloyd's Snow giving it a good run. In the hard-billed section birds of high merit were staged. Mr. W. Mallinson judged, and his awards were well received. A vote of thanks proposed to him by Mr. Jones being carried with unstinted applause.

GOLDF.: 1, Mealor; 2, Morton. BULLF.: 1, Walton; 2, 3, Gaylard. GREENF.: 1, Burns; 2, Benson and Young; 3, Morton; vhc, Gaylard; hc, c, N. Jones. BARRINGTON AND CHOPPINGTON C.B.S.

Annual pair show held March 8th, when thirteen pairs were placed before the judge, Mr. Thos Sanderson (Bridlington), whose awards were well received. 1, 2, T. Griffiths; 3, T. Dixon; vhc, J. Dixon; hc, c, Paxon. There was a good attendance. It was arranged to have a full meeting on April 5th to rearrange classes, etc., for the ensuing year and the enrolling of new members.—D. Reaveley, Sec.

BURSLEM C.B.S.

Second annual pair show held March 15, at headquarters, Barnfields Inn, Pleasant Street. The fixture turned out to be one of the most enjoyable and interesting shows held by this society. Along with the usual pairs of Norwich and Yorks., which were judged to everyone's satisfaction by Mr. Hawley, Hanley, was held a Roller contest, open to a four-mile radius. Mr. Tomlinson, Newcastle-under-Lyme, officiated as judge for these. I believe that this is Mr. Tomlinson's first time out as judge, but the exhibitors will learn from the awards that he placed an approximate value on their birds' song points. After the points (21) of one of the birds had been taken, Mr. Watson, who acted as steward, informed the judge that this particular bird was not for competition. It had been awarded 33 points at the last Crystal Palace show under Mr. Oldroyd, and it had been entered simply to have another expert's opinion of its song value.

AND

YOU CANNOT SPEND SIXPENCE TO GREATER PROFIT.

In 192 pages, 6¾ inches by 4 inches, "Cage Birds 1913 Annual" minutely traces out every phase of cage-bird keeping from January to December. The contents have been so carefully arranged and indexed that with a minimum of trouble the Fancier in doubt, be he beginner or old hand, may in a second solve any problem which may face him.

No matter what is wrong in your birdroom or aviary, reference to "Cage Birds 1913 Annual" will immediately right matters; no matter how often you may be exercised in your mind as to which of two methods is the better, the "Annual" will enable you to decide.

In compiling the "Annual," the Editor has not only considered the hobby during all the defined periods, but has endeavoured, with a great measure of success, to foresee and prescribe for every possible emergency. With "Cage Birds 1913 Annual" at hand, you will find that the year in your birdroom will go swingingly, without the many disappointments which hitherto have made you almost give up the hobby.

"Cage Birds 1913 Annual" is the reference for beginner and expert, for big breeder and small, and for those who keep birds for either pleasure or profit.

Exhibitors, Society Secretaries and Show Officials, too, are catered for no less than ordinary Fanciers. This marvellous year book, the golden cover of which is but an earnest of the sovereign value of its contents, will be found to contain full particulars (alphabetically arranged) of some 600 Cage Bird Specialist Clubs, ordinary Societies and Singing Clubs that are flourishing in the Kingdom. Just turn up this section and see the most convenient to join, and the advantages of membership.

The past Show Season has been a record one, and in the "Annual" will be found magnificent reviews of every variety seen on the bench, together with lists of the principal winning exhibitors. These reviews are not to be found elsewhere, and, written by specialists who have closely watched the course of events through the season, they, with the full standards and scales of points that are also given, afford exhibitors practical and infallible guidance in their preparation for big things next season.

With "Cage Birds 1913 Annual" to help you, you will be able to gauge for yourself what chance of success your exhibits have, or whether they are worth sending at all.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—6d. for the first eighteen words. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen. Name and address to be reckoned. MINIMUM, 18 words 6d.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first Eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Sixpence.

Headlines or Footlines, 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6, according to size.

ADVERTISEMENTS UNACCOMPANIED BY CORRECT REMITTANCE WILL NOT BE INSERTED.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements must in all cases bear the bona fide name and address of the advertiser, and no advertisement will be inserted if addressed to a receiving office, or similar place of call.

Small prepaid advertisements of a general nature and not connected in any way with the Cage Bird Trade are inserted at the rate of ½d. per word throughout. Minimum 12 words 6d.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

REPEATING OF ADVERTISEMENTS

ALWAYS USE OUR DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE. The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6. GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pay the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTE.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

"PHOSTO"

There is now no longer any reason to be troubled with bird-breeding anxieties, such as bad feeding hens, weakly youngsters out of condition, etc., as they can now be quickly and positively overcome by this remarkable food. Since this great food was brought to light a little over one year ago, it has effected the most miraculous results. Don't experiment with an untried food. Use "Phosto," which has proved itself to produce good results. Give it to your birds and note the improvement. This will again prove its value better than all the arguments. Good healthy birds mean greater success, and you will realise how very important is "Phosto." Get it at once and see the difference in your stock from early use of this excellent food; sold in 1/-, 2/6, and 4/6 tins, with directions, post free. The great bird specialist: Judge Silk, Whitstable. (631)

MEDICINES.

NOT SINGING.

Wanted a trial. We are confident our Medicines will give you satisfaction. Special offer to all bird fanciers. If you have a cock bird that you are relying upon for the breeding season, that is not in full song, or has gone into the soft moult, or a hen that is dull and moping, and will not shape for breeding, we guarantee you a perfect cure. We have the grandest medicine ever introduced for bringing birds into breeding condition. Ditchfield's Tonic Drops are a guaranteed cure for loss of voice, soft moult, egg-binding, going light, feather-plucking, diarrhœa, and for dull and moping birds. In 7d. and 1/1 (treble size) bottles. Special size, 2/-. This medicine is undoubtedly the finest pick-me-up ever offered for birds that are run down or gone off song. Fanciers note: If our medicines fail to do as advertised, we guarantee to return full money. For bronchitis, wheezing, and hoarseness, get Ditchfield's Special Lung Tonic. Also in 7d. and 1/1 bottles. The safest and most reliable medicine ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. As an advertisement we will send a 7d. bottle of each of the above medicines for 1/-, or two 1/1 bottles for 1/9. All post paid, per return, at our risk. Two valuable seed recipes: How to Feed Linnets and Rollers for Contest Singing, given free to all purchasers of our medicines.—Frank Ditchfield, Bird Specialist, Oldham.

SOFTBILL keepers, take expert advice before proceeding to buy and keep the larger species of Insectivorous birds. You will then have no trouble in keeping your pets in the best of health. This advice is offered in "Nutshell No. 26," by H. J. Fulljames. It is a wonderful little work, dealing with most varieties in a highly interesting and instructive manner. Foods and their preparation, and the various styles of cages also receive full attention. Can you breed Mealworms? This booklet tells you how. Post free, 2½d., from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Look at our list of agents; call on the nearest and get it for 2d.

ON receipt of [illegible] I will send, securely packed, on approval, the finest singing cock Skylark ever seen or heard, suitable for contest singing or shop's attraction, including free any valuable feeding secret which keeps Larks in full song ten months out of twelve. I have supplied more contest winners than anyone in England. heaps of unsolicited testimonials to prove this: same address 25 years: Woods, Cross-st., Dunstable. (488)

Rudd the Reliable

World-Wide Testimony!

Please read the following, and I think you will appreciate the difference between such great and uniform testimony and self praise and bombastic "brag." I suggest that it proves beyond all "cavil" where the birds are and the value to be obtained.

CANADA.—Winnipeg, March 27th, 1913.—"I beg to state that my shipment of birds arrived here on Tuesday, the 26th, in good order. I want to say I am more than satisfied with them, and feel sure they will do well. I will certainly do some further business with you. The birds have been very much admired by everyone that sees them.—Yours very truly, W.B.W."

SOUTH AFRICA.—Harrismith, March 13th, 1913.—"I beg to advise you that the birds you sent me have safely arrived, and in good condition.—Yours faithfully, S.E."

IRELAND.—Belfast, March 20th, 1913.—"The birds arrived all safe yesterday. I am very pleased with them, and thank you very much for sending such fine birds.—Yours truly, Nicholas J. Caffrey."

CANADA AGAIN.—North Vancouver, March 3rd, 1913.—"A few lines to acknowledge receipt of birds, which arrived here on the 22nd of Feb. I am thoroughly well pleased with the lot, and must thank you for your attention and prompt delivery.—M.R."

ENGLAND.—"The birds arrived safe and well after their long journey. I am very pleased with them, as they are splendid value for the money.—Yours faithfully, J. Millar."

ITALY.—Padova, April 5th, 1913.—"I have duly received this morning the Scotch Fancies. They reached me perfectly well.—B.L."

AUSTRALIA.—Rockhampton, Feb. 9th, 1913.—"I received the 22 Canaries on the 6th Feb., after travelling over six thousand miles, and looking in first-class condition, and with which I am well pleased. I also appreciate the manner in which you sent them. I will have another order soon for you. They were two months travelling, as they had to be transhipped in Brisbane to come up here.—Yours faithfully, H.C.E."

WALES.—Swansea, 12th Feb., 1913.—"Bird arrived 10 o'clock this morning all right, and is just the type of bird which I require.—Yours truly, J. Lloyd."

SCOTLAND.—Springburn, Glasgow.—"Parrot arrived quite safe and well. I am quite pleased with it.—Yours truly, G. Perry."

MY OFFER TO YOU

still holds good. I give you a cordial invitation to come and inspect my stock. My aviaries are open every day but Sunday. You need not announce your visit. Just come, and you will be assured of a hearty Yorkshire welcome. If you are unable to come, I will undertake to send any bird or birds you may require on seven days' approval at my risk. If birds do not give entire satisfaction I will exchange them with pleasure or return cash in full.

I have still for sale THOUSANDS of high-class Birds in all varieties, and shall be pleased to send you matched pairs or single birds (cocks or hens) to suit your requirements, at the following prices:

CHAMPION YORKSHIRES.

15/-, 20/-, 25/-, 30/-, 40/-, 50/- per pair.

My Yorkshires have won consistently all through the season, securing highest honours at leading champion shows throughout the country, also numerous trophies, etc.

There is no better blood in the Fancy to-day, and I am in a position to put the Amateur on the right road to breeding his own winners, or to supply the "old hand" with splendid stock or show birds at a working-man's price. The following are a few prices:

Yorkshire Cocks, grand lengthy birds, with good position, feathered to perfection, and in full song, 7/-, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6 each upwards.

Grand racy hens, splendid type, and feathered like wax, 4/-, 5/-, 6/-, 7/6, 8/6, 10/- each upwards. Matched Pairs, correctly mated for breeding winners, and sex guaranteed, 10/-, 12/6, 15/-, 17/6, 20/-, 25/-, 30/- 35/-, 40/-, 45/-, 50/- per pair. I can supply these in Clears, Ticks, Green Marked, Cinnamon Marked, or Self Greens.

To every Customer I guarantee complete satisfaction or Cash returned in full.

CHAMPION NORWICH PLAINHEADS. THE BULL-DOG STRAIN.

THIS strain has again upheld its reputation, and in addition to winning Firsts and Specials all over the country, has secured the following Trophies this year: THE PERCY ILLINGWORTH CHALLENGE CUP (won outright), the Sandiford Cup, THE O.N.P.C. CHAMPION TROPHY, F. Carl's Trophy, and has run second in the Cup competition of the N.P.C.

I am now offering a few grand birds bred from my strain. Yellows or Buffs, Cocks or Hens, real good show or stock birds for breeding own winners, at 10/- 15/-, 20/-,25/-, 30/-, 40/-, 50/- each. I am also offering a few grand pairs, personally matched by me, at 20/-, 25/-, 30/-, 40/-, 50/- per pair upwards. Strain guaranteed. I have a few grand birds from other strains, good thick-set birds, Cocks on full free song, at 7/6, 8/6, 10/- each; Hens, grand smart-feathered birds, 4/-, 5/-, 7/6, 10/- each.

CRESTS & CREST-BREDS. Large massive birds, with splendid feather, Cocks or Hens, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 20/-, 30/- each. Matched Pairs, 20/-, 25/-, 30/-, 40/- per pair upwards.

Pure-bred Seifert or St. Andreasburg Roller Cocks. Nothing gives my visitors so much pleasure as to sit and listen to these "musical boxes." I have 200 birds in stock, imported direct by me from the best training rooms in Germany. These are all in full rolling song by day and gaslight, with many changes of tours. They represent the last word in training, and will please anyone.

Come and make your own selection, or allow me to send one on approval at my risk. Prices, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 17/6. A few specially selected Schoolmasters at 20/-, 25/-, 30/- each; hens, guaranteed same strain, 3/-, 4/-, 5/- each; Cages, 3d. extra.

FALKIRK (Good Intent) C.B.A.

Meeting held Oddfellows' Hall, March 29, Mr James Muir presiding. Business: Appointing judges for shows. The following were appointed and have agreed to officiate:—Norwich, Mr. R. Martin Kirkintilloch; Borders, Mr. George Brown, Leith; Brit. and For., Mr. R. V. Raine, Cathcart. Next meeting will be held on April 26, when a table show of British birds will be held. Mr. John Penman has kindly consented to judge them. I hope the members will bring what birds they can and give him something to do. Mr. Robert Reid, Shieldhall, has been appointed to judge the First Feather Show.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

SHOW DATES FIXED.

To secure insertion in this column, a guarantee that the show will be advertised in "C.B." to the extent of at least 25/- must be sent to our manager. Please note that we only insert those that guarantee, so our list is a bona-fide one.

THE OLDEN DAYS ON TYNESIDE.

Some Reminiscences of an "Old Hand."

Apropos of the success scored by the Blaydon-on-Tyne Society at its last annual show, an "Old Hand" writes:—It is not so many years ago that the cage bird Fancy on Tyneside had a hard and desperate struggle for existence. Well do I remember how, a quarter of a century ago, the enthusiasts of Newcastle, Jarrow, Shields, Gateshead, Blyth, Bedlington, and other Tyneside towns struggled and struggled to keep their heads above water. The smaller towns actually did better than the larger ones, doubtless owing to the fact that a certain amount of local enthusiasm could be raised amongst the general public, which could not be in the more largely populated neighbourhoods. There are some of the old fanciers still living who know full well of the disastrous shows which were held in the Newcastle and Gateshead districts. Splendid schedules were issued, with classifications large and varied, a galaxy of specials was offered, the best of judges engaged, but whilst the men of Northumberland and Durham did their bit in the way of support, the fanciers from a distance fought shy of Tyneside fixtures. Why, no one could tell. Further, the general public were most apathetic, and the gate-money was such that never a single one of the shows could pay its way.

During the last seven or eight years all this has been altered, and Tyneside shows have come to be looked upon with far greater favour in every direction. Much of this is due to the influence of CAGE BIRDS, which has been a very potent instrument in arousing and maintaining interest in cage bird culture in the far North. With the coming of CAGE BIRDS, the Fancy in Northumberland was galvanised into life, and from that day it has waxed stronger and stronger. In the old days of which we speak, Blaydon was not "on the map" so far as the Cage Bird Fancy was concerned. The neighbouring township of Scotswood made several attempts to run a good show, but could not succeed in rousing sufficient interest to make the venture either self-supporting, or permanent. Nine years since, our Blaydon friends made a start, and after a hard and stern fight, they have succeeded in establishing themselves as one of the best societies in the North. Beginning in a small way, they have waxed stronger and stronger. Undismayed by the mammoth fixtures of other societies, they have held on steadily, and by energy and perseverance have made the name of Blaydon known from one end of the kingdom to the other. The position of the Blaydon Cage Bird Society to-day should be an encouragement to fanciers in other places to plod cheerfully on, determined to do or die. Blaydon has succeeded in the face of great odds.

It was, writes Mr. H. Lewis, Pendleton, a very pleasant surprise for me on opening my CAGE BIRDS on Friday, to see a sketch of my Canary Bullie winner of the Novice Mule class at the Crystal Palace. He has also won many other honours for me. Since the Palace I have sold him to Mr. Hart, of Sheldreth, Cambs., and I wish his new owner every success with him. I would like to say I bred him myself, and hope with luck to breed one again this year. I wish your valuable paper and staff every good thing.

I was very much surprised when I opened my CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL to find my Clear Cap Gold Lizard in. I must say it is encouraging for a novice to find his bird worthy of a place in your valuable book. I have lent it to a friend now to see if I can't get him to take up the hobby, in the same way that I gave first one and then another your good paper, CAGE BIRDS. Thanking you for the beautiful sketch of my bird.—E. Lord (Newchurch, near Manchester).

Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

No. 618.

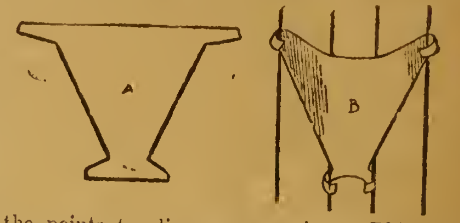
Sent by F. C. Dickens, 36, Vernon Street, Northampton.

The sketches show a handy tit-bit holder which may be easily made from the lid of a cocoa tin. Cut a piece to the shape of Fig. A., bend slightly as shown in Fig. B, and turn the points to clip on cage wires. This requires no soldering, and is useful for holding apple, suet, green food, etc.



No. 619.

To Hold the Nest Bag.

Sent by S. Parsons, Monk Bretton, Barnsley.

The nesting material holder shown in the sketch will be found useful for hanging on the cage front. It enables the birds to take only a small quantity of cowhair, etc., at a time, instead of pulling it out all over the cage bottoms, and it does not roll about when the birds peck at it. From some ordinary cage wire cut six pieces eight inches long and bend into shape, as shown in A., joining up the open end, so as to make a complete square, with a soldering iron. Then procure two pieces 4½ inches long and fasten the six squares with a touch of solder, about ⅝ of an inch apart, to them. On the other side place two pieces 3¼ inches long as at B. Three pieces of wire placed on the bottom, and a hook on the top for hanging to punched bar make the article complete.

NOTES BY THE SECRETARY.

A Reply to the R.S.P.C.A.

In our correspondence columns this week there appears a letter from Mr. E. G. Fairholme, Chief Secretary of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

I am very pleased indeed to have at last the gratification of welcoming a communication from a representative of this society. I have for two years past invited discussion both from the R.S.P.C.A. and the Society for the Protection of Birds. I have criticised their methods and their propaganda, have invited them to go further into the question of keeping of birds in captivity, in order that they might controvert, if possible, my repeated contention not only that the keeping of birds in captivity does not in itself entail cruelty, but that when birds are properly kept, their lot in captivity is infinitely preferable to the lot of their kindred who have to battle for existence against the perpetual struggles incidental to a "natural" existence—the continual dread of predatory animals, the sufferings due to weather conditions, and the necessity of providing their own means of sustenance.

For the present, I will content myself with answering Mr. Fairholme's letter, and with the statement that I shall be pleased, on behalf of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, to go as fully as he may desire into the whole question of the keeping of birds in captivity.

Cautions and Convictions.

Mr. Trower, in his letter published in CAGE BIRDS of March 8, says: — "The R.S.P.C.A. exists by getting convictions. They very seldom caution." This statement perhaps, was not intended by Mr. Trower to bear the wide interpretation which the Countess von Hahn and Mr. Fairholme have placed upon it. I take it that Mr. Trower was referring only to the methods of the Society as applied to bird-traders. In the matter of complaints against bird traders, neither the R.S.P.C.A. nor the R.S.P.B. has adopted the method of cautioning before prosecuting. It is notorious that the first a bird-shop keeper knows of anything wrong is that an inspector of one or the other of the two societies walks into his shop, and buys a bird or two, which he takes away with him. The next is that he receives a summons to appear before a magistrate upon the charge of "causing unreasonable suffering," etc. This charge is supported by the evidence of the paid inspector who has lodged the complaint. What did Mr. Hopkins, the Lambeth magistrate, say last February?

"I find, without hesitation, that nothing was done or omitted to be done by the defendant or his servants whereby any unnecessary suffering was caused to any of these birds. In my opinion this is an ill-advised prosecution, and I wish that I had had the courage of my first opinion, and refused process altogether. I should have saved the society from wasting its funds, and prevented energetic inspectors from making it appear almost ridiculous. The real background of such a case as this is to be found in the idea that it ought to be unlawful and cruel to keep wild birds in cages, and that idea gives birth to another idea, that almost any trifling evidence will induce a magistrate to convict an owner of cruelty to his caged wild birds. I dismiss the summons, and allow the defendant £5 5s. costs."

Mr. Fairholme further points out a slip in Mr. Pearson's letter in our issue of March 8, in which Mr. Pearson referred to Inspector Moxey as being an official of the R.S.P.C.A. Herein Mr. Fairholme is perfectly justified. Moxey was an inspector of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, not of the R.S.P.C.A., and has since, I believe, been dismissed for reasons which are transparent. He brought actions which were thought by the magistrates to be unwarranted, magistrates deprecated his methods in very strong language, and his society was more than once mulcted in costs. It is only a matter of which society Moxey represented, and although it is quite fair for Mr. Fairholme to point out that he did not represent the R.S.P.C.A.; this in no wise affects the seriousness of the matter.

The Attitude the R.S.P.C.A. Takes up.

Later in his letter Mr. Fairholme says: "The Society (the R.S.P.C.A.) is not against the caging of birds, but it is certainly against the keeping of wild-bred birds in captivity, and the cruelty involved in capturing them." Here, of course, it is meant that, in the view of the R.S.P.C.A., Canaries may be kept, but not British or Foreign birds. I am quite prepared to join issue with Mr. Fairholme, either in the columns of CAGE BIRDS or in "The Animal World," the organ of the R.S.P.C.A. The opponents of the keeping of British and Foreign birds in captivity have only to use their eyes at any bird show, and they will see birds in a degree of beauty of plumage that can only be accounted for by the fact that they are in absolutely perfect health and condition, such beauty and condition being far in advance of those of any wild bird. It is notorious that a British bird improves in plumage and general condition in captivity, and that a bird which has been several times cage moulted is always a much better bird than when he was freshly caught.

As for "the cruelty involved in capturing them," this charge is based upon the undoubted fact that occasionally a hobbledehoy or hooligan is caught using a brace bird braced in such a way that suffering is caused, and quite the larger proportion of prosecutions under the Wild Birds Act is against these miscreants. The fact remains, however, that a bird may be braced in such a way that no discomfort, not to say suffering, is caused, and many brace birds used by skilled bird-catchers have been used for years for the purpose, and the utmost care and attention are lavished upon them by their owners.

Bird-keepers and Cruelty.

Finally, CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE has for its principal object of existence the obviating of any possibility of "systematic neglect of birds in cages." It has on its books thousands of bird-keepers who have signed a declaration that they will take every care of their feathered pets, and will induce others to do the same.

The columns of CAGE BIRDS are every week full of instruction and advice to bird-keepers on the proper methods to adopt in order to keep their birds in a clean and healthy condition, and to the final words of the latter of Mr. Fairholme I need only reply that CAGE BIRDS and CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE are at all times ready to afford, and have offered to afford, either the R.S.P.C.A. or the R.S.P.B. any assistance in their power in the endeavour to abolish cruelty when it exists, or to prevent it when it threatens to exist. My contention from the beginning has been simply that the charges of abominable cruelty alleged to be incidental to the keeping of birds are grossly, and in many cases purposely, exaggerated by those who profess the doctrine that "it will be a good day for England when the keeping of any birds in captivity shall be made illegal." No statements of Mr. Fairholme can dispose of the fact that 999 out of every 1,000 birdkeepers rejoice when the humanitarian societies bring to deserved punishment those who inflict cruelty of any kind upon the birds or other animals which they have in their charge.

Figures Further Analysed.

It has been pointed out to me that in the figures which I gave last week as to the proportion of convictions in respect to cruelty to birds and offences during the close season to the total number of convictions obtained by the R.S.P.C.A., three months out of the four in respect of which I quoted figures were outside of the close season. This was only as it chanced to happen, but in order that the case may be stated with every fairness I have looked up the figures for a whole year, January to December, 1912 (both inclusive). During the twelve months 6,905 convictions were registered, of which 29 came under the heading "Wild Birds—Offences during the close season, etc." In other words, out of every 239 convictions for cruelty obtained by the R.S.P.C.A., one was in some way traceable to bird-catching, bird-dealing or bird keeping. Sixteen out of the 29 occurred during April and May, so that it is at least fair to assume that the larger half of the total convictions were convictions against ignoramuses who were taking birds during the close season, taking birds' eggs, and such like offenders.

The more complete examination only confirms my statement that bird-catching, bird-dealing, and bird-keeping are not the abominable practices they are represented to be in the literature circulated by the R.S.P.C.A. and the R.S.P.B. Cruelty in any form we, as bird-keepers, deplore as fully as do the professional humanitarians, and the humanitarian societies have the sympathy and would have the help of all bird-keepers in their efforts to put down cruelty of every kind. What we object to is the hysterical denunciation of bird-keeping as bird-keeping and the sickly sentimentalism of those who find no colours too lurid in painting the imaginary horrors conjured up by themselves.

How to become an Associate.

Many readers of CAGE BIRDS have written to say that they would like to join CAGE BIRDS' LEAGUE, but cannot afford the subscription. To meet their wishes we have decided to form, in connection with the LEAGUE, a body of Associates. All we ask of these Associates is that they will promise to give every possible attention to the wants of their birds. And they must induce others to see that their birds are kept happy and contented.

All that the intending Associate has to do is to sign the coupon herewith, get five of his or her friends to sign each a similar coupon, and send the six, together with a penny stamp, to the Secretary of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, who will forward by return an enamelled Button Badge of the LEAGUE. There will be no other charge. NOW, THEN, BIRD LOVERS!—USE YOUR BEST EFFORTS IN THIS SPLENDID CAUSE.

THE BIRD LOVER'S PLEDGE.

I hereby promise to take every care of my feathered pets and to induce others to do the same

BURSLEM C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held at headquarters, the Barnfields Inn, Pleasant St., April 3, Mr. H. Hassall in the chair. There was a fair muster of members to hear Mr. T. Hawley give his most enjoyable and instructive lecture on the breeding and rearing of Canaries. After the lecture Mr. Hawley invited questions, and it was simply splendid to see how courteously and willingly he ably answered same. At the close a hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer, who said in reply that what was a pleasure for us to listen to was more pleasant for him to say.—Leonard James, Sec.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

Annual general meeting, Oldham Hall, Liverpool, March 27, Mr. J. W. Metcalfe in the chair. The sec. presented balance sheet, showing that we had 15s. 6½d. in hand, notwithstanding the fact that we started the year with a debit balance of over £3, and lost 30s. over the annual show. Everything considered, it has turned out very well. The accounts were adopted unanimously. The following were elected for the ensuing year:—Pres., Mr. V. D. Deacon; chair, J. W. Metcalfe: vice-chair, J. Walker: auditors, T. R. Jones and J. Lloyd: committee, Messrs. Abbott, Bratherton, Green, Lloyd, Malone, Rowlands, and W. Walker. The hon. sec. and treas. having tendered his resignation, Mr. F. Handley, 23, Coventry Road, Wavertree, Liverpool, was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy, and all communications should be addressed to him from now on. The annual subscription was reduced from 5s. to 2s. 6d. It was proposed and seconded by Messrs. Rowlands and Malone that we adopt the old style of patronage, viz., Yorks., Norwich, and Borders, four each. Messrs. Lloyd and Deacon moved an amendment that we include novice classes. This did not find favour with some of the champions, and it was finally decided that the twelve classes be put on as in former years. The president, in his endeavour to find a way out of the difficulty regarding novice classes, made an offer of a silver cup, to be competed for at local shows. It was suggested that a radius of twenty miles be included. As no decision had been arrived at on the stroke of 11 o'clock, the chairman adjourned the meeting until April the 24th. In the meantime secretaries of societies are requested to send in their applications for the G.C.A. patronage as early as possible. July 17 has been fixed as the last day for accepting same. Sec. will be pleased to hear from any society willing to include one or more novice classes in their application.—F. Handley, Hon. Sec.

YORKS COUNTY B.B. AND M.C.

Sixth annual meeting held in the Market Tavern, Bradford, March 29th, Mr. W. A. Cowgill (vice-president) in the chair, through the absence of Mr. F. Archer through indisposition. It was most gratifying to see we have a decent balance to start the new season with of £1 3s. 7d. It is to be hoped that next season's exhibiting would be twice as heavy at Bradford; at district shows members had shown very poorly, which meant the cancelling of most of the classes. Dr. M. A. Wilson kindly mentioned that he would try and induce some of his friends to give a cup or something of the sort, which will be very acceptable. We were also very pleased to hear our chairman remark that he would present 7s. 6d., also Mr. Chittenden and Mr. Lane will give a silver medal. The balance sheet was passed subject to auditors' report. Officers for the coming season were nominated. Patrons, Theo. Martin, Esq., Messrs. Martin and Archer), E. Clegg, J. Chittenden, and W. A. Cowgill; pres., Dr. W. A. Wilson, on the retirement of Mr. F. Archer, which was accepted with regret; vice-pres., Mr. F. Archer, F. Inman, J. Isherwood, F. Hammond, H. H. Towers, W. A. Cowgill, H. J. Chittenden, and E. Clegg; auditors, Mr. S. Dean and Mr. R. Halliday; committee (Bradford district), Messrs. S. Dean, G. Ross, P. Jowett, and J. Gomersal, (outside Bradford district) Messrs. B. H. Wilson, Bramley, J. Gomersal, Morley, Daniels, Ossett, H.W. Walsh, Halifax, Jas. Wilson, Malton, J. Bourfield, Knaresboro', H. Stake, Brighouse, W. Lee, Doncaster, E. Clegg, Dewsbury. Mr. J. Lane was again elected secretary, but declined with thanks owing to other business. Mr. F. Inman was pressed to take on the same, but declined the same. Three new members were proposed: Mr. Daniels, Mr. H. W. Walsh, Mr. R. D. Parlett (slight sensational debate re the last named). Mr. Chittenden suggested enlarging club to include Lancashire as well as Yorkshire, and said that it would be better for competition, and also that the club would benefit by same. It was left for Mr. H. H. Towers to mention in his notes to the Press. Proposed that next meeting should be last Saturday in April. Mr. Isherwood proposed that the best thanks be proferred to Mr. J. Lane for his work as hon. sec. Mr. P. Jowett seconded. Mr. Lane suitably responded. Also proposed and seconded that the best thanks be given to retiring officers. It was suggested that societies wishing for club's patronage should send in their application as early as possible owing to getting same in Union Handbook, as per Mr. Hill's letter, also to avoid unpleasantness with secretary owing to dates clashing, as we want all in by third week in April. We shall be pleased if all intending members will send in their names and addresses, so that same can be got in books. Members present: Messrs. F. Hammond, H. H. Towers, W. A. Cowgill, E. Clegg, T. Inman, P. Jowett, J. Isherwood, and J. Lane, hon. sec.

Mr. Geo. Brown, the well-known Border Fancy enthusiast, of Leith, N.B., has removed to 8, Elm Place.

The first feather show of the Oxford and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. A. F. Fifield, press correspondent, has been fixed for July 3rd.

We hear from the hon. sec., Mr. F. Sweeting, that Mr. J. R. Houghton, Gloucester, will judge the Abersychan Show, held Oct. 30 next.

The date of Cardiff C.B.S. show, writes Mr. E. Thomas, sec., is fixed for Nov. 19, 20. Messrs. J. H. Payne, Gloucester, and J. Robson, London, will judge.

I never saw such value for the money as you gave in your Birthday Number, the plates were grand, writes Mr. G. Lester (Bridgport, Conn., U.S.A.).

A little error has crept into your report of the Burslem C.B.S. show, writes Mr. J. Tomlinson. The points awarded by Mr. Oldroyd were 23, and not 33, as published.

Will you kindly announce, writes Mr. W. Tallantyre, sec., Haltwhistle C.B.S., that we have secured Mr. Wm. Pennington, of Wigton, to judge our nest feather show on June 21.

Societies desiring the patronage of the Open Norwich P.C., at their forthcoming shows, should apply as early as possible to the sec., Mr. F. Rhodes, 32, Barlow Street, Bradford.

We hear from Mr. A. S. Treasure, hon. sec. Cheltenham C.B.S., that Messrs. J. Robson, H. W. Battye, and D. Longden have been engaged to judge the annual show Nov. 5 and 6.

If this meets the eye of Mr. F. Lightfoot (late of 39, Albert Road, Widnes) will he please supply a correspondent with his present address; or perhaps a local reader can oblige with the information.

Societies desirous of having the National Green Marked Y.C.C. patronage at their forthcoming shows should apply as early as possible to the sec., Mr. E. Clegg, Victoria School House, Dewsbury.

Owing to the date originally fixed, Aug. 27th, clashing with other local fixtures, writes Mr. G. E. Cragg, sec. Welsh Northern Counties F. and F.A., my committee have now decided to hold the event on Sep. 3rd.

A sample of remarkably light aluminium marking rings reaches us from Mr. J. Heap, of Renshaw Street, Burnley. They are very easy to fix, and close. A supply of register cards for breeding cages is sent gratis to his customers.

L. and P.O.S.: Lantern lecture, "British Bird Life," by E. Kay Robinson, at the Raglan Hotel, Aldersgate Street (next G.P.O.) 8 p.m., Thursday, April 17th. Admission free; all welcome. Now, British bird fanciers, come and see these fine pictures of your pets. —(Advt.)

We hear that Mr. G. Grimes, 57, Queen's Street, Stamford, has been appointed sec. of the Stamford and Dis. C.B.S., in the place of Mr. A. Harrison, resigned. Messrs. H. W. Battye, and A. Silver have been appointed to judge at the annual show of the society, Oct. 23 next.

At the Craghead and Dis. C.B.S. meeting, held March 29th, Mr. Jas. Stanger, of Pelton Fell, was elected to judge our young bird show, held July 12th, writes Mr. A. Dawson, the sec. Mr. S. Collicott, of the "Punch Bowl," has kindly offered to lend us a big room to hold the show in.

We have received from the hon. sec., Mr. V. Wynn, City and Sub. A.C.B., the statement of accounts for the quarter ending 1st inst. After meeting a loss of £1 16s. 6½d. on the pair show, the credit balance amounts to £7 10s. 11½d., an increase of 4s. 4d. on the amount brought forward from 1912.

To Society Secretaries, Advertisers and Correspondents generally.

Will all correspondents, and secretaries and officials of societies in particular, please note that CAGE BIRDS now goes to press on Wednesday afternoon so that all matter for publication in our issue of the same week MUST reach us on TUESDAY TO BE CERTAIN OF INCLUSION, or first post Wednesday at latest.

It would much facilitate our work if Secretaries and others would kindly write out their club reports, notices, etc., in the style in which they see them printed. Write on ONE SIDE ONLY of each sheet of paper used.

An interesting evening has been arranged for the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. next meeting, May 7th, writes Mr. W. Hodson, when an egg food making competition will take place. Several handsome prizes have been promised." Members and friends should make a note of this date, and not fail to be present.

The Leyton and District C.B.A. is giving a first-class dramatic entertainment on April 14, at Grange Park Hall, Grangepark Road, Leyton, write Messrs. Forso and Son, the hon. secs. We hope to see a good crowd of members of other societies; we can promise them an enjoyable evening. Admission is 6d., doors open 7.30 p.m.

At a meeting of the Clapham C.B.A., April 1st, writes Mr. T. J. Hose, hon. sec., it was decided that we have an outing on May 18, to Effingham Common, when we hope all members will endeavour to join us. We also cordially invite all our fancier friends to join us in this ramble, further particulars of which will be announced in due course.

That noted dealer, Mr. W. Rudd, of Norwich, has once again given us evidence of the great satisfaction he affords his customers, by submitting a very big batch of recent testimonials, including some wonderful ones received from abroad. Mr. Rudd has recently, too, had the honour of supplying close on 40 birds to a well-known titled millionaire.

OBITUARY.

We very sincerely regret to learn that our old friend, Mr. T. Heath, has suffered a severe loss, his wife departing this life last week, after a lengthy illness. Mr. Heath is well known as one of the best of our present-day judges, as a great lover of the Crested Canary, and for his successful management of the Crystal Palace Show some few years ago, and the sympathy of a wide circle of fancier friends will be extended to him.

I am deeply sorry to say that Mr. T. A. Hoskins, a member of our society, has, during the last week or so, been bereaved of both his wife and her father. He is left with two children. We as a society give him our deepest sympathy.—G. T. Wall, Sec. Long Eaton and Dis. C.B.S.

We deeply regret to hear of the sudden demise of the sister of Mr Wesley T. Page, our well-known foreign bird expert, and Editor of the Foreign Bird Club's Magazine, which took place on April 5. Mr. Page's hosts of friends in the Fancy will join us in an expression of sympathy at his misfortune.

On receiving my paper, Cage Birds, I was agreeably surprised to see the lifelike sketch of my winning unflighted buff cock, first at Clapham Show, where he was claimed at £5 10s., writes Mr. W. Wren, Oxford. I must say it gives your artist, Mr. Norman, great credit for his splendid drawing of him. I am pleased to say the bird has won several other first prizes for his new owner. I wish your valuable paper continued success.

We have received the Manual of the North London C.B.A. from Mr. P. W. Jeffries, the hon. sec. It is a neatly got up booklet, and contains a list of officers and committee, particulars of membership, syllabus of a well diversified programme of events for the year, show rules, conditions of competition for the various cups and trophies, and a full list of members' names and addresses. The hon. sec.'s address is 31, Brighton Road, Stoke Newington, N.

We have elected Mr. W. Vardy to judge at our annual members' show on December 6, writes Mr. G. T. Wall, hon. sec. Long Eaton and Dis. C.B.S. We also decided not to have an open show (as announced) in connection with the members' show this year, as we find that funds are not good enough for us to be able to guarantee prize-money, which is required by a rule of the society. We are holding a First Feather Show on July meeting night.

Visitors will be cordially welcomed at the meeting of the City and Suburban A.C.B. on Monday next, April 14, when Mr. G. E. Weston is due to give a lecture entitled "Some Things I Don't Believe," which, we understand, deals in an unorthodox manner with some matters of great interest to bird-breeders and keepers. Commence at 8 p.m., in the hall of the Church Institute, 59, Paddington Street (on High Street, Marylebone Road), W.; close to Baker Street Tube and motor 'bus routes.

It was a pleasant surprise you gave me by depicting my unflighted yellow on the front page of your interesting and instructive journal, Cage Birds. It clearly proves to me that you give all birds that merit it a chance of such an honour, whether they belong to large or small exhibitors. I might say that I am one of the latter. It will be news to our local men to know that I bred the bird myself, and that the Palace made his second appearance in open competition, the other being Stoke Open Nest Feather Show.—Leonard James (Burslem).

The Gateshead Appeal

Our appeal on behalf of the Gateshead C.B.S. has already, we are glad to say, borne fruit. It will be remembered that this fund was instituted last week with a view to helping this most excellent and deserving society to discharge the heavy financial liabilities incurred by reason of the failure of their last annual show (due to the railway strike) and the prosecution of the secretary by the police authorities for getting up a prize-drawing with the idea of providing funds. Full details of these matters were given in our issues of dates March 29 and April 5. We shall be glad to acknowledge any sums, however small, which readers and societies care to contribute. We suggested that if a few societies "sent the hat round" at meetings, and those present put even a copper therein, that the sum necessary to save the working-men fanciers of Gateshead from financial disaster would quickly and easily be forthcoming. A generous offer by Mr. C. H. Goodman will be noted below. Our fund at present stands:—Cage Birds, £5; Wigan C.B.S., 5s.; Mr. T. Farnish (Baildon), 2s. 6d.; Mr. Fred Hammond (Bradford), 5s.; City of Bradford O.S., 10s.; total £6 2s. 6d.

What Others Think.

Sir,—I was glad to see that you had opened a Cage Birds subscription list in connection with the unfortunate affairs of the Gateshead C.B.S., and I sincerely trust that the result will be such as to relieve this most deserving and progressive society from any financial embarrassment. Apart, altogether, from the magnanimous manner in which the committee, in the matter of so arranging dates that these two great events should not clash with each other, such an exhibition as our Gateshead friend's provide is of so vast importance to the Fancy that any fancier worthy of the name could not contemplate even its possible discontinuance without some feeling of dismay. I have pleasure in enclosing five shillings on my own account and also ten shillings, which I collected from my fellow members of the City of Bradford O.S. at their meeting on Saturday last. We wish the fund every success.—Fredk. Hammond.

Sir,—The Wigan and Dist. C.B.S. are in sympathy with the Gateshead Society. I put the case to the last meeting; it was well-known to all members through reading Cage Birds. The members thought very highly of the magnificent way you opened the subscription list. and instructed me to forward 5s. from the funds of the Society, which you will find enclosed.—Ed. Ball, sec.

A Generous Offer.

Sir,—Re Gateshead Society, if the secretary will canvass the members only during the next fortnight to purchase a "Filup" Young Bird Feeder (one each only) at 1s. 3d. each, I will forward to him, on receipt of the names, as many feeders as he gets orders for, the money to be kept for the benefit of the Gateshead Society.—C. H. Goodman, 24, Bedford Rd., Kempston, Bedford.

An Early Sand Martin.

I saw a Sand Martin flying near here about 10.30 a.m. on March 31st, writes Mr. Walter Swaysland, Brighton. I have never seen one so early before.

Southern Norwich P.C.

Clubs that wish to have the patronage of the above society must now apply, with a written acknowledgment of accepting the following eight classes (a rule) for champion section to be printed in their schedules:—Norwich, clear or invisible ticked, Yellow; ditto, Buff; ticked, marked, or variegated, Yellow; ditto, Buff; Yellow hen; Buff hen; Yellow unflighted; Buff unflighted; novice section, six classes.—F. S. Matthes, Hon.

Our Frontispiece.

I have been a reader of Cage Birds since the first number, writes Mr. John Sykes, of Musselburgh. There is always something in it to interest, even in what I call the slack season, which for my part means the end of the show season. The Hawfinch, besides winning at the Palace, was successful at the City of Glasgow, Alnwick, and Carlisle and 2nd at the Scottish National. My feeding of Hawfinches, of which I generally have about six, is two parts sunflower, the remaining two parts hemp, canary and linseed in equal portions. I never miss an opportunity of giving greenfood and fruit of some kind, throughout the season, as I find it does not pay to start giving these things with a rush, just when the moult is coming on. You have to sacrifice some of your summer in running about the country getting hold of the different weeds as they become ripe. I colour-feed them, using some good insectivorous food, and mixing the colour feed with it.

Wild-Bird Life.

The First Nests.

The prevailing weather conditions are not quite what we could wish for to usher in the most promising month of the year. The rains still continue, and the cold winds make outside observations anything but pleasant, excepting when the none too frequent gleams of sunshine brighten the landscapes, then, we forget the cold and the dull skies and live in the mellow light and hope of the future. The spring is here, and wild birds have obeyed Nature's call and are busy in hedgerow and copse. Our resident birds are hardy and as we have had an unusually mild winter it was only natural to expect them to make an early start in nesting. The first full clutch of eggs to be observed by the writer was that of a Robin in a discarded paint-tin lodged at the bottom of a bush in a quiet corner of a meadow, little frequented by man or animal. The Robin somehow cannot resist the snug quarters of an old tin can, or kettle. In such they are, as a rule, only exposed to the wind from one direction, and are generally perfectly dry.

THE GREAT (OR OX-EYE) TIT.

An ivy covered bank is another favourite site, indeed this is frequently chosen by all ground building birds, and the writer has just located the nest of a Blackbird upon one facing the east, but as a high fence was within a few yards of it, the cold wind would hardly be felt by the sitting bird. The nest was placed in a depression, with a clump of tussocky grass overhanging, and the thick ground ivy growing round. We were within a few feet of the site, but the mother bird clung to her treasures, her bold black eye watching us closely, as we circled round, pretending not to notice her. It is astounding how near one can get to birds by moving quietly past them. One must not stop to gaze; if so, they are off at once; move quietly, in a natural manner, and they do not fear you.

In the garden, the trees by the roadside, and the small copse, the "saw-sharpening" note of the Greater or Ox-eye Tit can be heard at all hours of the day. He is a pugnacious little rascal, and during the breeding season will stand no rival to his claims, and so just now they are only seen in pairs. Some of them have already commenced to nest.

We have received the year book of the Sheffield and Dis. C.B.S. It contains the rules of the society, list of officers and committee, the classifications and judges for the Nest Feather Show, June 28, and the members' show, December 6, the syllabus of lectures and other events for the season, and a list of members with their addresses The hon. sec. is Mr. A. Hobson, 66, Langsett Avenue, Hillsbro, Sheffield.

At the usual monthly meeting of Blaydon-on-Tyne C.B.S., writes Mr. G. Havver, sec., there was a fair turn-out of members who decided to advertise the annual show in Cage Birds,. We also decided to engage Messrs. W. O. Cowgill and W. Mundell, both of Bradford, as judges The date of the show is November 14 and 15. Two new members were proposed, Messrs. T. Robinson, Ryton, and J. G. Robson, Blaydon.

Cupar O.S. New Departure.

Perhaps you will permit me through the medium of your valuable paper to inform the Fancy that the Cupar and Dis. O.S. has decided to hold a separate show for cage birds, writes Mr. J. Peattie, sec. The date has been fixed for 4th October. The committee hope that cage bird fanciers generally will support them and make this new venture a success. Particulars will be advertised in due course.

The G.C.A. New Secretary.

Mr. F. Handley (23, Coventry Road, Wavertree, Liverpool), asks us to announce that he is the newly-appointed secretary of the Green Canary Association, and that the subscription has been reduced to 2s. 6d. He also wishes to increase the membership, and asks fanciers to give him their best support to make the Green Club a success. Everything is being done to encourage the novices: special classes and prizes for next show season.

HOW YOUNG BIRDS SHOULD BE REARED

By T. JOHNSON (Southport.

A Fine Contribution, on a Matter of Vital Importance, that will Help You to Succeed in the Hobby.

I HAVE been assailed by doubts as to my worthiness to write on the above subject, but after fifteen years in the Fancy, during which I have always gone about with, I hope, my eyes open, I have gained some knowledge that has, at any rate, been of use to me, and which may be also of use to my readers. I will endeavour therefore to give a few points about rearing young birds. I intend to describe my own methods, as well as those adopted by other fanciers. In other words, I will give you the same hash with different sorts of seasoning; and surely I shall then be able to offer you something that will be agreeable to your palate.

Are we too Conservative?

Taking us as a body, we Canary fanciers are very conservative. That is, we regard anything in the way of a change, anything unorthodox, from out the corner of our eye, as it were. Most of us prefer to go plodding along the same old lines, utilising the ideas promulgated by our forefathers, sometimes doing well, sometimes badly, but at all times trusting to the good offices of that fickle jade, Luck. Personally, I have tried all sorts of ways and means of rearing young birds, and have had all sorts of results, but generally managing to obtain a decent average of youngsters. I am convinced, however, that we haven't yet reached the limit of knowledge in the science (is it a science?) of Canary breeding. No other section of the Fancy—by which I mean the whole feathered and furred Fancy—owes so little to the cause of science as does the Canary Fancy. Why, I don't know; unless it be that the Canary is a difficult subject for scientists to handle. If only some of the great men would take up the Canary hobby with a view to experimenting, then we should perhaps be able to learn something notably about youngsters dying in the nest.

WORTH MANY TIMES ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD!

This noted Yellow Scots Fancy cock is a winner of many prizes, including 1st and special at the Edinburgh O.S. New Year Show. Its owner, Mr. J. Dalgleish, of Trinity, Edinburgh, was offered £40 for this fine specimen, but refused to part with the bird.

Paving the Way.

But I am anticipating: Before we get young ones in the nest we must pair up our birds, and before we pair up the birds we must see to it that they are in the best possible condition for pairing up; therefore, after this somewhat lengthy preamble, I will first deal with the treatment of the hens during the winter months. Although it doesn't strictly fit my title, the "rearing of young birds," I am convinced it is of so much importance to the success of rearing, that I must give the treatment that I have found best for getting the hens into condition.

We will assume the time to be the end of October, or the middle of November. Practically all birds are through the moult by then; and if the surplus stock—that is, if there is any surplus—is not disposed of, no time should be lost in getting rid of it, as you can't have too much room for stock being kept for the next year's breeding. If fresh arrivals are expected, either for change of blood or to augment the existing stock, the sooner they come, the better, so as to ensure them becoming used to the fresh surroundings and any difference in treatment.

Preliminary Treatment of the Hens.

Turn all hens wanted for the next year's breeding into the largest flight available; and when I say a flight, I don't mean an ordinary breeding cage, but a cage that will allow the hens the full use of their wings, and to chase one another about as if they were blessed with the joy of living. Such a cage prevents the birds from getting too fat, the latter a condition of things which would be deplorable. Of course, it is out of the question to put birds into flights which are being exhibited; they must be kept in separate cages. But directly the show season is over, into the flights they should go to be prepared for breeding. Cock birds can be treated similarly, but in separate flights; towards the beginning of February they will be getting quarrelsome, so they should then be caged off.

How to Feed the Stock Birds.

It is assumed that all the birds are healthy. If any are not—that is, if there is any long standing disease, such as liver complaint, in individual specimens—much the best method is to do away with them. They are not worth breeding from, as it is a hundred to one on the youngsters being weakly, even if they rear any at all.

Let the staple diet be the best Spanish canary seed. Three times a week give rape seed, equal to half-a-teaspoonful per bird, and give summer rape and winter rape alternately. Not many fanciers use winter rape; but it is one of the most important seeds, in my opinion. I believe it to have the effect of keeping the hens "down," and preventing them getting too fat. I shall have something more to say about this seed later on. No egg food is required at all yet, and no tit-bits, unless a piece of apple twice a week may be called a tit-bit. Once a week give the same quantity of groats as you give of rape seed.

If you can get green-food, either watercress, chickweed, or groundsel, give it by all means. Don't be afraid of giving plenty, because green food is absolutely essential to the well-being of Canaries all the year round. Use sawdust for the cage-bottoms, as it prevents the feet clogging better than does sand; but give grit in a separate tin.

Tested and Found a Success.

Give fresh water every day. Twice a week give as much carbonate of soda as will lie on a sixpence, in an ordinary two-ounce drinking vessel, for one day only, and the same quantity of Epsom salts once a fortnight. My reason for giving the soda is because it prevents the liver from getting clogged up, and, of course, the Epsom salts are to keep the bowels properly on the move. I may say that I have given my own stock this soda, etc., through the last winter, and I never started the breeding season with a healthier and more promising stock of birds. Liver trouble, which is easily discernible by the whip-like action of the tail, and the difficult breathing of the bird, is this year conspicuous by its absence in my room, thanks in a great degree to the soda treatment, and to plenty of exercise.

Give a bath every day. Some will tell you to withhold the bath on cold days; but I have always found the birds themselves to be the best judges as to whether it is too cold to bathe. If they don't feel inclined for a bath, they won't take one; but if they are in a healthy condition you will find they will bathe oftener than not, and I have never yet noticed any ill effects accrue.

When Pairing Time Approaches.

The foregoing treatment is all that is necessary until the beginning of February, when you should add to the diet half a teaspoonful per bird per week of niger (or inga) seed. Inga seed may be regarded as a tit-bit with medicinal qualities; to the bird fancier a happy combination of qualities surely, because the birds eat it with avidity, and you know that it is doing them good, in so far that it has a tendency to prevent egg-binding.

At the beginning of March the inga seed may be increased to twice a week. No egg food is required until the birds are paired up. If you were to give egg food during the winter months, you would probably have your hens in breeding condition by the middle of January; then, if a week's sharp frost were to come, it is long odds that you would have some of them go into soft moult, a condition of things than which it would be impossible to imagine worse. About the middle of March the hens may be caged separately in double breeding cages, and the last week in March, if the weather is favourable, the cock may be introduced in the other compartment, a wooden slide being between them.

Before we go any further, a few words about cages won't be out of place. I have used single, and double, and three-compartment cages, and have come to the conclusion that the double cage, about 36 inches long, with both a wooden and wire slide, is the cage par excellence for the rearing of young Canaries. I might say here that I regard the single breeding cage as an abomination, and I wouldn't have one in my room for breeding purposes. It is difficult to understand why fanciers stick to the single breeder; in my opinion the disadvantages are many, while the advantages are nil.

The Course of True Love.

We will assume you have six cocks and six hens. You introduce the six cocks into the cages containing the six hens, and you have a pair of birds and a large nesting receptacle in each cage, while you have six other cages lying idle. Now, why in the name of all that's logical shouldn't the birds be enjoying the benefit of the six cages lying idle. One double breeder takes up the same room as two singles, and if you have the cock on one side and the hen on the other, when the slide is drawn they have the benefit of a large roomy cage, with room to smile at one another, or to quarrel, as the spirit moves them, because, as most of you are aware, Canaries, after the first glamour of married bliss is over have many quarrels. There are not many pairs of Canaries that could qualify for the "Dunmow Flitch."

Some Problems of Mule and Hybrid Breeding Unravelled.

By J. STEEL (Dalkeith).

Do you believe it possible for a Finch-Canary Hybrid to breed with a Canary?

I have never seen a claim to having obtained fertile eggs from a hen Hybrid, but the evidence in support of a claim to having produced young from a cock brown Linnet Mule, with a hen Canary, is so conclusive that I am convinced that it is possible. Needless to say, such an occurrence is rare.

Would such three-parts Canary Mule be eligible to compete in a Mule class?

This is a moot point. For my part, if I possessed such a bird, and it were a good specimen, showing distinct features of both parent species, I would certainly exhibit it. A judge has only these features to guide him in recognising the parentage and excellence of a Hybrid.

The Finest Hybrid ever seen.

From what cross was produced the finest Hybrid you have ever seen?

A certain Goldfinch-Bullfinch was, in my opinion, the finest specimen of a Hybrid ever I have seen, because it approached the highest standard of excellence in size and colour known to exist in its combined parent species.

What do you consider the most common fault in the average Hybrid?

A tendency to one-sidedness, i.e., pertaining too much in size and colour to the smallest and plainest of its parent species. Of course, light Canary Hybrids do not come under this standard of colour judging, one-sidedness being with them a desideratum.

Do you consider it fair that a Hybrid bred from foreign Finches should be allowed to compete in a class allotted to Hybrids between British birds?

While recognising and regretting the handicap such inclusion places on the British Goldfinch and Bullfinch, I fail to see how this could be prevented. It must be borne in mind that such Hybrids are only half foreign, and when we consider the difficulty of discriminating between some foreign specimens, I think it would be beyond the abilities of any judge to detect the foreign element in all Hybrids having such parentage.

Foreign Bullfinches a Lottery.

Have you ever found Hybrid breeding from the Russian Bullfinch to be a profitable hobby?

I think I err on the side of moderation in saying that not one Russian hen Bullie in a dozen ever becomes the mother of a Hybrid. Add to this the fact that despite its Russian parentage a Hybrid so bred may be either good, indifferent, or poor as an exhibition specimen, with the former in a minority, and the speculative side of the question is very apparent. Of course, some breeders may have found it profitable, but the same may be said of those who try their luck at Monaco or in a Hamburg lottery. I must include myself among those whose love of the hobby is only stimulated by the difficulties encountered, and who are blind to the financial side of the question.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

ALMOST NUDE (Let Me Live).—Keep the cage well strewn with clean gritty sand, and in a comfortable, but not overheated, place, and if bird seems strong and robust, allow it to bathe freely in mild weather. For the rest, treat it as advised in detail to "Sympathetic" in last issue. You say nothing about the age or general condition of the bird, but if it has left its youth far behind, I'm afraid you will find cure a rather slow and unsatisfactory process.

KEEPING EGGS (Bert).—For safety, about a week, or, in quite favourable circumstances, a fortnight, is about the limit of time you can keep eggs with any fair chance of their hatching out robust chicks. A good deal, however, depends upon the virility of the birds, and consequent vitality in the germs. They should be embedded in bran or meal to exclude air, stored in a cool, but not very cold place, and be given a half turn morning and evening. By the bye, how do you know these eggs are "quite fertile," as you say? It is utterly impossible to tell by any external appearance whether a freshly laid egg is fertile.

SITTING WITHOUT LAYING (Novice).—The phenomenon is due to an abnormal condition of the ovary, and the prevailing conditions of weather for some time prior to time of writing is not likely to help matters. If the hen is still sitting and shows no signs of laying when this appears, remove the nest and nest-pan and treat for a fortnight as advised to "Alex. B. McF." in this issue. Then, if she seems anxious to nest again, try her once more. If she then re-commences sitting without laying, give her a clutch of common eggs to hatch out and rear.

SMALL LUMP ON STOMACH (Robt. L. Ker).—Sorry, but I cannot gather any definite idea as to what the lump is from the particulars you give. It would have been some assistance if you had enclosed a rough sketch showing the position of the substance. As the bird is apparently quite well and singing, it cannot be a very serious matter, and I am really inclined to think it is nothing worse than a little superfluous fat. Try keeping the bird on a diet of plain canary seed with a liberal supply of green food, but no other extras or luxuries, for a fortnight or three weeks, and meantime add ten drops of syrup of buckthorn to the drinking water every second day for a fortnight. Leave the substance entirely alone. If it does not disappear voluntarily, or should any other symptoms arise, write again at close of above treatment, and give full particulars of the result.

SITTING IN NEST (Alex. B. McF.).—You mated the hen much too soon, and probably whilst the reproductive organs were almost or quite dormant. Remove the nest and all nesting material, and separate the hen for two or three weeks. Keep her where she can see or hear a vigorous singing cock in high condition, or a breeding pair. If she is in very plump condition give a diet of plain canary seed only, with a liberal supply of green food for one week, and add to the drinking water ten drops of syrup of buckthorn every second day. After this, in addition to the usual seed diet, give half a teaspoonful of egg food with half the bulk of a mixture of equal parts maw, sesame, and gold of pleasure mixed in it. If you have any mealworms available, it would be an advantage to add two finely chopped fat worms to the egg-food each time before adding the seed. Give this every second day, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, and teazle, with a sprinkling of mustard seed. Give two leaves of dandelion daily. Keep cage floor strewn with clean gritty sand. In the drinking water give four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and tincture of steel two days in every three for a week. Then you may try mating her again in two or three weeks hence if she appears anxious to nest, and if she repeats her late performance, and settles down to sit in nest without laying, give her a clutch of common eggs from another pair to hatch out, and let her rear the young if she will do so. It is not at all unlikely she may do so. If she is not too plump in condition omit the first week's treatment, and give the buckthorn only for three consecutive days, then go on with latter part of treatment.

STORING COLOUR-FOOD (Roller). (1) Air-tight tins, or tins with close, well-fitting lids, which are generally regarded as fairly air-tight, would form a very tolerable substitute for jars or glass vessels for storing the colour food, but wherever available the latter kind of vessels are preferable, as being easier to keep thoroughly clean and less liable to affect the contents by chemical reaction. (2) Yes, the quantity of salad oil means adding one ounce to the quantity comprising each formula—which, as you will see, totals 16 ozs.

REFUSING TO SIT (I. S.). Unfortunately, that is if the eggs are likely to be fertilised, you can do nothing whatever to make the hen take to the nest and hatch out the eggs. The only way out of such a difficulty occurs when you have other hens about laying, or ready to commence incubation, when you would distribute the forsaken eggs among one or two other hens to be hatched and reared. From a week to a fortnight is the time you may keep the eggs and still have a reasonable chance of them hatching out robust chicks when set. See reply to another querist this week on this subject.

PROLIFIC AND BACKWARD. ("Paddy").—(1) This hen has not really had a fair chance given her, or I imagine she would give a fair account of herself. She was mated a great deal too early, and both your feeding and general management seems to have gone against her since. You omit to say whether you have now put her to sit on the one egg in case she did not lay again. You ought to have done so, and allowed her to sit her full time for the sake of the rest, whether anything came of it or not. Whilst sitting, feed as advised in latter part of reply to "Bullfinch, Handforth," in this issue. You would be well advised to get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," and be guided by the information you will find therein. (2) Keep the backward birds caged separately. You will lose time rather than gain anything by putting them together before they are ready to mate. Treat them for two or three weeks the same as advised to "Alex B. McF." in this issue, but if the birds are not in an overfed condition, omit the first week's low dietary. Give the buckthorn for three consecutive days instead, and then go on to the latter part of treatment.

BACKWARD ROLLERS (Quiz.).—Keep the birds as they are—one in each side of a double breeding cage—but if you have a wired slide, substitute this for the wooden one and keep them in this way until you see the cock frequently calling the hen to the wires and feeding her, and between whiles singing at her with drooping wings. If you have no wired slide you will find this love-making going on at the small wired opening at the bottom of the partition. Then, if the hen is quite active and responding freely to the attentions of the cock, you may let them go together, and from this point interfere as little as possible with them. Remove the nest bag until after the birds are together, or it will only get wasted. When putting them together a mere tuft of hair may be given them to play with until the hen wishes to nest in earnest, when the bag must be supplied. Give a staple diet of two parts canary to one part rape. Every second day give each half a teaspoonful of egg food, or crushed sponge cake, with half the bulk of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame mixed in it, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, and teazle, with a sprinkling of mustard seed. Give two leaves of dandelion to each daily.

CROSSING ROLLER. (Banjo).—Of the two crosses you suggest for the Roller cock—Yorkshire or Norwich—I should prefer the Yorkshire, which will give you a more smart, racy-looking bird, and a slightly better singer. As regards your question about the cross, you will certainly get a better-looking bird than the pure Roller, but you must expect to sacrifice something in quality and a purity of Roller song. Still, if the young cocks are trained under a good Roller cock, they will make very good songsters, and you may easily be able to dispose of them as songsters at about 7s. 6d. There is generally a ready sale for such birds, but the pure Roller is coming so rapidly to the front as a songster that it is scarcely safe to say whether a first-cross would sell quite so readily. This is a question to be decided in a small way, as this, by what the local demand is likely to favour. The initials B.R.C.C. signify British Roller Canary Club; they are not a guarantee of quality; but only indicate that the owner or breeder is a member of the society.

COLOUR-FEEDING AND SITTING (Bullfinch, Handforth).—You seem to be a little mixed up. You ask at what age to start giving young Canaries colour food, and go on to say yours are yellow and buff. Do you mean last season's birds, or are you such an "early worm" as to have young of this season forward enough to begin to think of feeding for colour? No fixed age can be given for starting to give young birds of the season colour food prior to the first moult, because young birds do not all begin to moult at a given age. Late-hatched birds will begin to moult as early as eight weeks old, or even a little earlier, whereas the early-hatched broods will be twelve, or more, weeks old when they begin. The rule is to begin feeding a little before any feathers are dropped. To be on the safe side, it is sufficient to give a little colour food about twice a week to early-hatched broods from about the middle of June. This will suffice until the birds show distinct signs of dropping into moult, when you must begin to give a regular daily supply. You do not mention the breed you keep, but pure tasteless red pepper is the mainstay for colour-feeding all fed varieties. Get the brochure of "Colour Feeding," which our Manager could send you for 3½d. post free. A staple diet of plain canary is all that is needed whilst hens are sitting. Just a scrap of egg food, or a small pinch of mixed seed in the egg drawer two or three times a week may be given, but be sparing with these extras.

REMARKABLE ABNORMALITY (Doubtful Starter).—It is certainly very remarkable for each one of your six hens to depart so far from the normal course with their first clutches. I cannot hazard a guess at the probable cause without detailed particulars how and where they have been kept during the winter, and treatment since mating them up. Were they fed up any length of time prior to mating? There is one remark in your letter which may suggest a possible clue. It is that the hens are all "year old birds." Does this mean that they were hatched last season? It is very vague. If hatched last season, especially if rather late hatched, it would partly account for their small clutches, and they will doubtless do better next time. It would be interesting to know whether the hens are all related, and, if so, something about their breeding. You may treat them without separation for two or three weeks the same as advised to "H. Williams" in this issue, and, please, let me hear the result.

A SYSTEM OF FEEDING ("Lecteur").—The packet seed you use as staple probably contains the whole gamut of seeds used for feeding Canaries in more or less wholesome proportions, but still, by having all the seeds continually before them, there cannot be much actual variation in diet. As a simple and easily arranged system giving ample change or variety, the following will answer very well. For a regular staple give plain canary only in the hoppers. In addition give separately, in the egg pan, or on a clean place on cage floor if cages have no egg pans, a pinch of summer rape—about half-a-teaspoonful for each bird—every third day. On two other days each week give a similar quantity of the packet seed you now use as staple diet, and once a week a small teaspoonful of some soft food—egg and biscuit, crushed plain biscuit, sponge cake, or bread soaked in milk and dusted with soft sugar. Every day in summer, and three times a week in winter, give a spray of some succulent green salad in season, or sweet fruit when green salads are out of season. This will furnish an ample and wholesome variety of changes. Clean gritty sand is best covering for cage floors.

INTRODUCING FRESH COCK (J. Walker).—There would certainly be some risk now in introducing a fresh cock to the hen for the second brood until the first brood are at least old enough to place in a nursery cage, to be fed through the wires, in case the strange cock maltreated them. You have let the best chance slip by. The best and only really dependable way to avoid the risk is to remove the first cock when the hen is put to sit, and let her hatch and rear the brood alone. Then, when the hen is ready to go to nest again, by which time the young will probably be quite safe to go in a nursery, you introduce the fresh cock in the ordinary way. You might, by removing the first cock now, or when the hen has sat twelve or thirteen days, but keep an eye on her for a few hours after removing him, and if she leaves the nest and refuses to go back, there will be nothing for it but to return the cock and wait until the young are old enough to go in a nursery, if necessary, before exchanging the cocks.

MISSED LAYING STAGE (H. Williams).—It is an abnormal condition of the reproductive organs, which cannot as yet be satisfactorily accounted for. Remove the nest and nesting material, and separate the birds for a fortnight. During this time feed the hen the same as advised to "Modus Operandi" in this issue, and if you have any mealworms available give her two fat ones daily. If she will not eat them separately, chop them up and mix with egg food. Give dandelion for green food. During the first week add to the drinking water six drops of dandelion juice, and as much sulphate of soda as will cover a sixpence, every second day, and on the alternating days give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel.

STOPPED SINGING (Modus Operandi).—You only need a little patience, and I think matters will turn out right. It is not very uncommon for cocks, after the first season or two, to behave as yours have done. I suspect they were not in quite such high condition as you thought, and the approach of these dry, spirit-sapping winds which prevail at time of writing, has probably put them back a little. Leave them with only the wire slide between, and as soon as milder conditions prevail they will doubtless buck up again. Your seed mixture is not of the best description for your purpose. Treat both sexes alike now, and in addition to the staple diet, give each bird half a teaspoonful of egg food with about half the same bulk of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame mixed in it every second day, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet and teazle, with a sprinkling of mustard seed. Give two leaves of dandelion daily to each bird, unless the hens seem very forward, in which case give them watercress, but give the cocks dandelion daily. If the hens get so forward as to pull at their breast feathers, mate them, and take what chances there are.

NO RESULT AND SEX (W.K.).—You mated the birds much too early, and, I daresay, they were in nothing like breeding condition at the time, when the absence of any result would be a natural consequence of your indiscretion. See that the birds are kept in a fairly bright position in healthy surroundings, but free from cold, cutting draughts. What do you call "plain Canary food?" If it is a mixture of many varieties of seeds, discontinue it and substitute a staple diet of three parts canary seed to one part summer rape. For the rest, treat birds the same as advised to "Modus Operandi" in this issue. You need not separate the birds, but will require a little patience. ybe. The song is the safest and only quite reliable sign of the male sex for the tyro to judge by, and as neither of the birds you have bought sing, it would be best for you to get a more experienced fancier to look at them and give you an opinion. All external differences are so purely comparative, and also slight, that they cannot with any certainty be conveyed in writing. Tersely, the hen has a soft henny look compared with the bold, defiant appearance and manner of the cock. Study the black and white plate of Norwich in Part VI. of "Our Canaries," when you should soon begin to recognise these appearances.

ROOM, MICE, SAND (H.R.S.).—(1) You do not say whether you mean to have the birds flying at liberty in the room or keep them in cages, but as you might readily calculate the amount of cage room you have available, I take it the first-named plan is what you have in view. If I am correct, the room would accommodate at its full capacity 220 average sized Canaries. As a breeding stock to start the season 60 birds would be ample say 15 cocks and 45 hens. If short of cocks, 10 would do for the same number of hens. (2) A mouse-proof floor of concrete, and the total absence of waste food lying about are among the best things to keep mice away. To exterminate them, an occasional thorough application of the "Virus" remedy advertised in our columns is about the best thing. (3) Cannot be quite certain what the sample of powder you enclosed consists of. It is either a fine grade of silver sand, similar to that florists use, or finely sifted sea-sand. I fancy it is the latter. Its only use in cages is to assist in preserving cleanliness. It is too fine to be of use in aiding digestion.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

INDOOR AVIARY (Starter).—For any chance of breeding you should only put in two pairs. Pekin Nightingales I do not think would attempt to breed in that space, and they are not always safe with small birds in a confined space. Mannikins, except the Bronze-winged and Magpie, have not proved free breeders, either in cage or aviary; it would, however, not be easy to give a reason for this. Here are a few pairs that should do well together: Zebra Finches and Silverbills, Zebra Finches and Bronze Mannikins, Silverbills and Bronze Mannikins; less probable breeders would be Orange-cheek and Gold-breasted Waxbills, Avadavats and Gold-breasted Waxbills; while if you were content with a single pair in this division, you could choose from the following: Gouldian, Long-tail, and Rufous-tail (Ruficauda) Grassfinches. Beautiful or pretty and freely imported birds besides those you name are: Green Singing Finches, Alario, Bib, Spice, and Ribbon Finches; all the Waxbills. Cock Weavers make a beautiful show when in breeding plumage as a series of odd birds.

ROSE COCKATOO (T. C.).—Rose, Rose-breasted, and Roseate Cockatoo, and Australian Grey Parrot are all trivial names referring to the same bird, most usually known as the Rose-breasted Cockatoo. It is as large, or a little larger, than a Grey Parrot. They are chummy, acrobatic birds, and very hardy; very many of them do not count for much as talkers; at the same time I have heard and seen several really talented birds of this species, so there is no reason why you should not make a talker of one—first win its confidence, and as soon as it becomes tame, then talk to it gently and quietly, while supplying its food, etc.; keep it where it will hear conversation, yet you must take care not to scare, and during its quiet and restful periods you can train it by the constant repetition method.

CAGE FOR FOREIGN BIRDS (Banjoe).—You must allow one foot of frontage per pair for the Waxbills, and one and a-half feet for such as Grass Finches, assuming that the cage has a depth of from 18 to 24 inches, and height of 24 to 30 inches, and it would be best to have wooden sides, glass would do for the sides outside the wirework, providing these are arranged so that the slides move in draught-proof grooves. I really advise a 3½ to 4ft. cage and two pairs of birds, as the arrangement most likely to yield breeding results, and in this connection our reply to "Starter" in this issue should assist you. Use twiggy branches as perches, and two nest receptacles for each pair of birds. Back and sides should be of wood, or wood and glass as above, for a position near a window

QUAIL, PIGEONS AND FINCHES (W. Tomlinson) —(1) Yes, you should be able to keep the above together; arrange a heap of brushwood in some dry corner as cover for the Quail, and arrange your food hoppers for the Finches so that they will be difficult of access to the Pigeons. (2) Broad-leaved Laurel, Berberis, Box, Evergreen Privet, Golden Privet, and Euonymus are all good, with coarse grasses and cereals growing in between, left to grow at will between the bushes in irregular tufts, but an open space should be left where the grass can be clipped and swept regularly. (3) You will get better results from two or three pairs than from a larger number, you can easily increase your stock at a later date from some of the young birds you breed.

FOREIGN BIRD QUERISTS

WHAT BIRDS? (F.D.S. and P. Pearce).—Both your queries refer to Indian birds, and so far as the data you supply at present is concerned I find myself unable to pick them out—such birds as they mostly resemble would not live on the diet you are giving. An Anglo-Indian, well acquainted with Indian birds, who happened to be in when your queries came to hand, was equally fogged. Could you supply more detailed descriptions, and also give me the locality they came from. I think I could then identify them. I am retaining your descriptions for reference, and hope with a little more information from you to clear up the mystery.

AFRICAN WEAVER (L. N.).—Give these birds an aperient and then put them on a course of Byno-phosphates—as regards the former, making the drinking water just saline with Epsom salts will suffice, and half a tea-spoonful of the phosphates in the drinking water during the period of the moult and for a week afterwards. At moulting time these birds are the better for a little animal food, and though some individuals will not take mealworms, the majority do so readily, if yours will take them give two or three per bird daily, after the moult is over you can lessen the quantity, and one daily, or occasionally, will suffice —the same to the period when they change from winter to breeding plumage. Probably your bird is in the habit of clinging to cage wirework, and thus the flight and tail feathers get frayed and ragged.

TOUCANS (H. P.).—The staple diet should be a good insectile mixture, first made slightly moist with boiling water, then stir in scalded grocer's currants, and dripping—standing it on a range while stirring so as to properly incorporate the dripping. They also eat boiled rice (sweetened), boiled potato, ripe fruit, such as bananas, apples, pears, cut up into small squares, grapes, cherries, soaked sultanas, and some live insects—so that a varied diet can be easily maintained. If possible, ascertain how it has been fed previously, and do not make any sudden change of diet, continuing what it has been accustomed to, and then gradually get it on to some such diet as above. As soon as they become tame and thoroughly accustomed to you, you will find them most interesting and engaging pets.

INDOOR AVIARY (C. E. J.).—I hate straight formal perches in an aviary, neither do they give the birds proper foot exercise. There is no need to nail the branches to the wall; get three large pots, arrange your branches in these, partly fill with sand, and then run in liquid cement; this will solidify and make a good firm base for the branches. You will have to put a few nails into your wall to hang up some small rush nests, square boxes with a hole in one side for entrance, cocoanut shell nests, etc., for the Foreign species. They will not interfere materially with the Canaries, or vice versa. Of course, there is always some commotion and confusion when fresh arrivals are put into an aviary, and possibly one or two nests might be disturbed in the confusion, but they soon settle down, and you will have to take what risk there is. Zebra Finches, Long-tailed Grassfinches, Bib Finches, Avadavats and Gold-breasted Waxbills—I think you could put these into your aviary with scarcely any interference to the nesting Canaries. "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1s. 1d., and Nutshells Nos. 16 and 20, 2½d. each, all post free from our Manager. You can easily have grass in pots and saucers, and taking these out of doors for watering—a double set would enable you to keep up a continuous and fresh supply of green food by using the sets alternately.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

HAS THERE EVER? (Matt. Beacroft).—You ask: "Has there ever been a clear Mule shown at the Crystal Palace?" This seems an odd sort of question, seeing that a clear Mule of some kind or other is invariably to be seen at that show—often three or four of them. We recently illustrated one that won at the 1913 show. Have you missed out a word? Did you intend to specify some particular kind of clear Mule?

MAGPIE WEAK (E.M.F.).—You give no particulars as to the housing and feeding of the bird, and it is possible the trouble is due to some inadequacy in one or both of these items. The bird should have a very large cage, and be allowed to bathe freely. Its diet must comprise a proportion of flesh food—newly-killed mice and sparrows being, perhaps, best of all, though rabbit flesh, and fowls' heads and "innards" are excellent. I can only (in the absence of fuller information) advise you to get a supply of extract of malt and hypophosphites (combined) from a chemist, and mix a teaspoonful daily amongst the bird's soft food; commence with rather a smaller quantity. This is a good food for softbills that are weakly and not as plump as they ought to be.

A QUARTETTE (T.W.H.).—(1) I have never had the pleasure of keeping Dartford Warblers (being a poor man) but should certainly think they would winter safely in a well-sheltered aviary in the South of England, assuming, of course, they were properly fed. I take it that you know they are a resident species. (2) Five shillings to seven and sixpence. It is dangerous to buy birds not well on food; they will not, for one thing, stand a long journey. If they reach you at all "down" through fasting, you'll be very lucky if you pull them round. (3) I have known Blackcaps safely winter in an outdoor bird-room, where the water was many times frozen. In any case neither Nightingales nor Blackcaps need be taken indoors until the autumn nights turn frosty, or very cold, wet weather sets in. (4) If the aviary is a really large one, Wagtails will do no harm—they can be very vicious towards others of their own kind, however.

GREENFINCH MULES (True Blue).—The hen Canary when ready will fly about flapping her wings vigorously, and calling loudly; she will carry bits of nesting stuff in her mouth. The cock Greenie will also dance around quite lively, calling ("breezing," as it is termed) at the top of his voice; he will also feed the hen. Give the old birds canary, teazle, rape, and sunflower seeds; early dandelion, chick-weed, groundsel, and shepherd's purse; egg-food when about ready to nest, and when they have young. At the latter period give the hen also cracked hemp and groats, chickweed and shepherd's purse. I have very seldom found it safe to leave the cock Greenie with the hen whilst rearing the young. Some are perfect brutes. One I bred with last year, however, was just the opposite—as gentle as the proverbial lamb. He was devoted to the hen, and touched neither nest nor eggs; he was inclined to be spiteful, however, towards the Mules, when they commenced to hop out of the nest-pan, as, indeed, practically all of them are.

HEN BULLIE AND COCK CANARY (D. C.).—Bullie hens vary as much in taste, so far as nesting sites, nesting materials, etc., are concerned, as do Canary hens. I never interfere; it is best to let the fair sex have their own way. If you get out into the country at all, you can find dried grasses, bents, and an old Blackbird's or Greenfinch's nest (pulled to pieces), and give these to the hen Bullies. My own hen [illegible] and Linnets in particular) are often fond of charpie, and one or two have [illegible] cosy nest practically entirely of it. Some use an earthenware nest pan, but the majority of hen British birds prefer wooden nest-boxes, or Roller travelling cages with the end (or top) and inside fitments removed. Some like an old Blackbird's nest to re-line, and some will lay their eggs in simply a hole made in dried grasses strewn on the cage floor. They are peculiarly variable. About the best nesting material out for hen Bullies can be made from a cheap cocoanut fibre doormat. Unravel the fibre, and cut it into varying lengths (from one to two-and-a-half inches). It works out very cheaply in price, and my Bullies delight to build with it. They will rear the young (or attempt to do so, I should say, for few succeed, the usual plan being to put the eggs under foster parents) on the ordinary seeds, but must have unlimited seeding shepherd's purse, groundsel, chickweed, and the like. In addition, mine also relish soft foods, and egg food, and live ants' eggs. You could utilise the cock Canary for one nest with a hen Canary.

LINNET "OFF COLOUR" AND LOOSE IN BOWELS (Jim M.).—Get one ounce of crystals of citrate of iron and quinine from a chemist, and give the bird a course of this tonic medicine daily for a week. It will also correct any tendency to looseness of the bowels, which will be helped, too, by giving him a small teaspoonful of maw seed daily for a time. Dose: As much of the crystals as will just cover a threepennypiece, dissolved in two tablespoonsful of drinking water If necessary, continue it longer, but give then only on alternate days (plain water in between).

MANAGING A MULING COUPLE (Tenby).—Different fanciers have different ideas, and you must adopt those which fit in with your own cages, etc. It is possible for half-a-dozen or more ways to meet with equal success. Run the wired slide down the centre of the cage, leaving the Goldfinch on one side, and the hen Canary on the other. When the Goldie is in breeding condition and vigorous song, they will not take long to strike up an acquaintanceship. Probably he will commence to sing to her through the partition wires; also to feed her. These are the sure signs of an "understanding." When you notice these things, put a few coarse pieces of material (moss) out of a nest-bag into the hen's compartment. If she commences to carry these about in her beak, you can hang in the nest-pan (or box), giving her at the same time a little more nesting material. Should she carry the latter into the nest-pan, and appear bent on nest building in earnest, hang the nest-bag up against the wires, or put it in the nesting rack, if you use those appliances. First thing next morning (the earlier the better) withdraw the centre partition, letting the Goldie run with the hen. If you retire quickly and discreetly on the other side of the room, you will no doubt see the hen "call" to the Finch, and he, if really in breeding condition, is not likely to lose any time in doing the needful towards ensuring fertile eggs. It is well not to hurry one's muling hens, or they are apt to get on with their first nest before the Finch is fit. Keep an eye on the Finch at first, until you learn his disposition. Some pull the nest about, and some will put their beaks through the eggs when laid. Such birds should be run with the hens only for a hour or two each morning and for a short time in the evening, too, being shut off during the day, and entirely (with the solid wood partition) as soon as the hen commences to sit. The procedure applies equally well to all Finches, besides Goldies, especially where the cock bird is kept to the one hen.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Frightened.—Death occurred from depletion following hoemorrhage, probably of accidental origin. There was a very large blood clot on the left side of breast.

H. E. Addison.—The primary disease was fatty degeneration of the liver. The exciting cause of death "enteritis." The structural alteration of the liver is denoted by the symptoms you describe, viz., inordinate appetite, and drowsiness, particularly after eating. The disease is slow and insidious in its onset, and by the time symptoms are manifest, the organic changes are too far advanced for cure. I should advise remaining bird to receive twice weekly some glauber salts, as much as will lie on a sixpence, dissolved in a wineglassful of drinking water.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

An interesting meeting was held on April 1st: the attendance was not so large as one would have liked, but no doubt the very wet night prevented many turning out. The evening had been set out for questions and answers; this is an excellent means of getting different men's views on birdy matters, and a large amout of knowledge is gained. Our novice members will do well to bear this in mind and not miss these meetings in future. Mr. Frank Cole was in the chair and very ably conducted the meeting; many knotty points were raised, and a really good discussion took place on the question and answers. Those taking part were Messrs. Fairman, Pratt, Clarke, Franklin, Whiffin, Hodson, Cole. Vote of thanks to chair closed meeting.—W. Hodson.

Eagles' Ways.

As a rule large birds do not lay so many eggs as the smaller species. The Golden Eagle deposits two eggs only, and seldom rears more than one chick. Both parents are very attentive to the nestling and should one be shot or meet with an accident the other will safely rear the young one alone.

New Sec for Edinburgh O.S.

Sir,—Would you kindly allow me to intimate that I have been appointed secretary of the Edinburgh Ornithological Society. I would esteem it a favour if all the old members would come and rally round this old society, and forward booking of hens as early as possible, so as to allow me to get a good grip of the business before next meeting. Wishing every success to Cage Birds.

Size in Exhibition, British Birds and Hybrids.

Have Judges a Craze for it?

Sir,—As a novice exhibitor of British birds, I have been much struck with the apparent craze which most judges, at shows which I have attended, have for excessive size in British and Hybrid exhibits. On many occasions exceptionally fine specimens have had to give way to others for no other visible reason than the fact that those preferred were a size or two larger. The losing birds were correctly marked, in perfect condition, and, in many cases, beaten by very rough giants. I would not suggest that bantam exhibits should compete with equal chance of success, but surely a good British bird of the average size of those at liberty in the open should not have to stand aside as regards honours in favour of an untidy, though much larger bird. In the Hybrid classes, as is well known, most of the alleged "Hybrids between two British birds" were obviously the offspring of foreign birds.

Short Entries at Scottish Shows

Are "Clique Judges" to Blame?

Sir,—It appears to me that the whole position is centred on one or two main points, namely, the use of a certain material for the cage bottoms, and this, having failed, a special kind of perch was adopted, these both being means of attracting the judge's attention. What surprises me is, why cannot the Border Fancy Canary Club come forward and take this matter up seriously, and adopt a rule that only a certain class of material should be used at all shows having the patronage? I think crushed white oats or plain canary seed. The former would be preferable, as cheaper, and all fanciers, both town and country alike, could obtain them. I hardly think they would be as heavy, and thereby not add to travelling expenses. In the rule book of the above club it states that the object is to further the interests of the above variety, but when a motion is sent in to the annual general meeting, such as the above, it is over-ruled, for the simple reason that only part of the members are represented. To alter this I suggest that previous to the annual general meeting, all matters of a kind such as this should be sent out on ballot papers, or on a referendum system, to all members, and thus enable each individual to give his own unbiassed opinion. I am quite aware that even if the above two things were rectified, there would still be the question of cages, but I think that these two points would be a big step to raise the matter above suspicion.

Pro Bono Publico.

Sir,—Your many readers will be pleased now that they have the name and address of this judge and breeder of even marks, who has boastfully assured the Fancy that, if given a chance at open shows, he will give the best of satisfaction. Surely committees in trouble will not allow this chance to increase entries to slip by. Is it true that he has won five firsts all told, some of which were won under a judge he frequently purchased birds from? I make no insinuation of anything wrong, but only wish to point out that, if true, on his own reasoning he must have won under "clique judges," as there were always short entries at the shows where he won! Now my informant, who is a near relative of his, says he comes out every year to sweep decks, with Greens and Cinnamons, and when he fails, the judges are a "clique." I am told that, with the assistance of "Lover of Justice," and co., he is going to wash out all the "clique judges," and come out next year, and sweep decks with Greens, Cinnamons, and marks. I fear he has again set himself a rather big task, but we'll wait and see. He says it is his duty to remind me that I purchased two of my last season's winners in Edinburgh for about 2s. I say it is not true. I try to breed my winners, most of which I actually have bred, yet if I see a bird to beat mine, I try to purchase it, but am not always successful. Neither is it true that a judge told me not to show under him (nor would it be wise). I doubt all he refers to, including thick spars, coarse gravel, distinctive marks, etc., are, like the honest judge, come from Whitburn (where judge hecklers also come from). Let breeder of even marks use all the freedom he likes in staging his birds, but let others have the same freedom. Let me also, in a less degree, get a cheap advertisement, and say that my birds last year won under no less than twelve different judges—rather a large "clique." I thank him for wishing me a successful breeding season. Let me say to Mr. Logan, the prophet, that his offer cannot apply to me, as I have never tried to guess a medal winner, outside my own. Why not accept my offer made to him through Cage Birds, Feb. 1st? I can also believe him when he says he has preserved all his prize cards since 1899, as I know a very small case could hold them. It is quite a regular thing for shows to reject names in other varieties, as well as Borders, but yet the supposed "clique" are being engaged for next year, let me tell you. It is no fault of mine that you applied my illustration to yourself; it served my purpose in showing that increased opposition would naturally decrease entries at our shows. I am pleased to hear of your success in business; long may you succeed. I have never thrown malice at you at any time, neither would I think it worth my while to differ severely with you. I have heard and read many a story about judges (more than I would credit as being true), but the straightforward man, with nothing to hide, who knows so many faults about judges, should state the show, the judge with the faults, so that suspicion may not rest on the wrong men. I would advise show committees to secure the services of Messrs. Logan and Lambie next season, which should be a certain cure for short entries at our Scottish shows.

Plainhead.

How Can All Shows be Made to Pay?

Sir,—Kindly allow me to reply to my old friend, Mr. Woodall, of Sheffield, who I regret to notice dismisses my suggestions re points judging with the curt assurance that it wouldn't work; and he sends particulars of the work of the Sheffield O.S., showing that they have made a success on lines which differ but very slightly from the usual lines on which almost every society is run. Now I know Mr. W. too well to think that he will be offended if I say that his attitude reminds me of the old Lancashire man who, when sitting by a roaring fire, had a remark made to him about the severely cold weather. He curtly replied that there was "nobuddy out that mattered." And in these days when show after show is being given up and societies all over are complaining about their losses, one can hardly help taking Mr. W.'s arguments that way. But in his balance-sheet, which he so kindly sent me, I notice against the profit of £10 4s. 6½d. an item for £28 add for donations, which shows quite clearly that even with a body of workers such as few clubs have (as shown by the receipt of £21 14s. for sale of tickets over and above gate-money) that even they cannot make a show pay on its own merits, but are dependent, like the rest of us on the generosity of wealthy outsiders to cover their losses. A rather humiliating position for the Fancy generally, is it not? Of course it is all right to accept donations from wealthy people who are really interested, but it would certainly be more creditable to us not to depend entirely on charity in such matters. Now as I have been much misunderstood (probably owing to the impossibility of condensing all the arguments for, and methods of carrying out, etc., into reasonable space), will you kindy allow me to draw attention to the following points, which I may say are all parts of the one idea, and not to be taken as separate suggestions:—(1) That I advocate points judging only as a means whereby we can raise the prize-money to a point at which it would be possible for a successful exhibitor to pay his way. (2) That unless something is done to make this possible we shall never succeed in attracting any great number of people to go in for showing, at present even those who benefit by the sale of stock, or dealers trading on their reputation as successful exhibitors, do not do any more showing than is absolutely necessary to accomplish their purpose. (3) That points judging by ensuring a fair chance for different sections of a variety shown in the same class would do away with the necessity for an extravagant classification. By all means give all the classes necessary or that are likely to be reasonably filled, but classes should not be extended to such a point as to lower prize money to a ridiculously inadequate figure. There are numerous minor points that occur to me in its favour, but the main idea is to raise prize-money. People will always compete and keep competing, when there is a reasonable chance of winning something, but no man who works for his money takes any interest in throwing it away without a reasonable chance of benefiting in some way.

The Breeding of Yellowhammer-Canary Mules.

Two Cases of Success Reported.

Sir,—I have read with great interest in the last two issues of Cage Birds, regarding the breeding of Yellowhammer Mules. I also have tried this cross, about four years ago, which would be only about one year after I started keeping birds, so you see I was then only a novice at the game. I happened to look at the stock of a very old friend of mine, and he had the Yellowhammer paired up with a hen Canary. I asked him what he was trying to do, and I got the reply, in a very serious tone, that he was "going to do what had never been done before," i.e., breed some Yellowhammer Mules. "I am sorry to say I was ignorant enough to laugh at him. The Yellowhammer had been running with about a dozen hens for two or three months, and had been feeding them, so he said he would have a try to mule with him. However, a few minutes after I was asked in hushed tones by my friend to "just look at that Yellowhammer now," and sure enough the act of copulation was taking place. The outcome of it all was my buying the Yellowhammer (it was a good exhibition bird as well, and got me a few prizes). Well, my friend got a young one up to four days old, when the hen left it to go to nest again, and stopped feeding. I took the Yellowhammer home, and paired him straight away to a hen I had carrying nesting stuff at the time, and to my delight she seemed quite satisfied with her strange mate, and let him feed her. I got three young Mules up to three days old, but when I got home from work that night my wife told me to "go and look at that poor hen and young ones, and if she had her way she would kill the beast of a Yellowhammer." Goodness knows, I felt like it myself when I saw them. The young were dead in the nest, and the hen was on the cage bottom with hardly a feather on her, and bleeding from head to tail. However, after a stormy week with the wife, I put him up with the only hen I had left. She seemed as pleased as her predecessor, and things went on fine, and she had four eggs. I think two of them were full, but that was as far as I got with that clutch, for he had the lot broken the next time I went into the room. Anyway, that finished my career with the breeding of Yellowhammer Mules, and I vowed to have no more of it. I wish I had him now, however, as I am certain he would not get the chance to do it again. He died the following show season; after coming from Gateshead, I think it was. I know now my failure was through inexperience; had I taken him away from the hen, all would have been well. I have three witnesses who can prove all this, and all are connected with cage bird societies, so you will see that it is not bluff, as a lot of fanciers whom I tell think it is. Well, I wish Mr. Pain and Mr. Pauley "all luck," and hope they will let us know how they get on, for I certainly shall have another try when I get a Yellowhammer so steady as my old one. I might say that he took mealworms from our hands, and was uncommonly steady for a Yellowhammer. I wish your paper all success.

Spring Visitors in the Colne Valley.

Sir,—In the course of a ramble in the Colne Valley, near Uxbridge, on 6th inst., I saw a dozen to fifteen Martins, mostly Sand Martins, but at least two were House Martins. I also saw a single yellow Wagtail. These are the first summer migrants I have seen this year. Of residents, I saw: Reed Bunting, Stock Dove, Kestrels (two, both quite near the train in motion). In all I had thirty species on my list. The following were singing lustily: Thrush, Blackbird, Lark, Robin, Wren, and Hedge Accentor, although the day was not at all genial, a strong cold North-East wind prevailing all day, making one feel sorry for the newly arrived migrants.

Appointment of Judges at Gateshead 1912 Show.

Sir,—"Bobby" again states that he has not had a reply to his questions. Now "Bobby" knows perfectly well that his statement is what is called a terminological inexactitude. His comments upon (not answers to) my own questions are characteristic of "Bobby," and make suspicion a certainty. To question (1) he says he would not associate himself with such a rumour. Quite right; no one would think of circulating an ill-rumour against himself. (2) Bobby advises me to enquire of of the Newcastle members. I have done so, and been informed that "Bobby" is the gentleman who exhibited in the novice classes against genuine novices, and the catalogue confirms this. (3) To this he pleads ignorance and innocence. Well, it is only his past conduct that caused "Bobby" to be suspected.

The Border Fancy and English Shows During 1912.

Sir,—Having received your excellent Annual for 1913 (which, by the way, clearly surpasses all previous editions), I, of course, turned my attention to the variety which appeals to me, viz., the Border. I was somewhat surprised to read the severe remarks by Mr. S. Hadwin, regarding the matter of support given to shows during the past year. Unfortunately, however, only one case is cited, namely, Bradford National. This, I am aware, was a failure as regards entries, but still I think when all the circumstances are taken into consideration, one can somewhat understand the reason for it. In the first place, it will be remembered that at the time the entries closed, we experienced one of the severest snowstorms of the past winter, and in view of the fact that the majority of fanciers hail from the North, they would be somewhat reluctant in sending in their entries. Secondly, a specialist judge was not adjudicating, and although the one appointed has in one or two cases had a fair following, I think this is the main point which accounts for the shortage. It will be remembered that the previous year, when Mr. Patterson judged these classes, a good entry resulted, and I think it would be to the benefit of the Bradford National Committee if, when allotting judges to this section, they would take this into their consideration, as the majority of shows in the North provide a judge specially for this variety. I do not wish it to be understood that I am making any complaint against the judge in question at the last show, as, in my opinion, all birds, with the exception of one case, with which I differed, were well handled (but no two fanciers see eye to eye with one another in any variety). My main point is that it is necessary where the full patronage is given to appoint a specialist judge, who has handled these birds regularly.

My principal reason for taking up the above matter is because I know from experience in my own district that the Border Fancy is practically in its infancy, and as one or two fanciers are taking them up, I naturally wish the same to go forward, and not keep at a standstill. I was pleased to read Mr. Patterson's excellent review, and also notice his remarks respecting cups, and I think this is a splendid chance to push forward our favourite. I shall be glad to see some other fanciers taking up the matter with a view to getting the same put on a proper basis.

Type and Quality.

The Scottish Norwich Plainhead Club.

Sir,—On reading the above club's report of the annual meeting, I was highly amused at a few things that transpired at same. Firstly, just imagine the idea of leaving the trophy business in the hands of one who is practically a novice. Secondly, the judges are the same old firm, and I stoutly maintain that more than one of this select band are incapable of judging the Norwich Plainhead Canary. Lastly, I notice that Mr. W. C. Smith, of Balquhidder, has been admitted to membership. Why, may I ask, was he debarred from membership in the year just past? This society boasts of a large membership, and it may be news to some that it has been engineered by a certain division for quite a number of years. At least, that is the opinion of Foot Trouble in Softbill Birds.

Sir,—Can Mr. O. Puck or any of your many readers state a reason for the feet of Softbill birds growing twice the ordinary size? Can it be cured? I have had a Grey Wagtail with the left foot very large, and also a Thrush. Both birds stand chiefly on one leg, the other being held up under the breast feathers. Shall be pleased to learn reason and cure. I wish Cage Birds every success, which it well deserves.

The Yorkshire British Bird and Mule Club.

A Proposal to Extend its Radius.

Sir,—I was glad to see that Mr. Tower has been giving the Yorkshire British Bird and Mule Club a good lift, and that he has suggested that the membership be open to Lancashire. It is a suggestion that I am very much in favour of, and seeing from time to time Lancashire men have applied for membership, if any are desirous of becoming members, and will write me and make any suggestions, I would bring them up at our adjourned yearly meeting. I might say that the club has finished the year with a balance of over £1 in hand, and we have promise of a trophy and other support. All we want is more competition and more members, for the subscription is so small, only 2s. 6d. per annum, that without larger numbers it is crippled. As the founder of this club, I should like to see it extend its usefulness, and give its patronage to Lancashire cage bird clubs' shows. Let me again invite the Lancashire fanciers to consider the matter, and let me hear from them.

Age of Captive House Sparrows.

Sir,—In reply to "J.P.," I had a Sparrow which lived ten years. It died last July. I caught it in Kegworth, Leicestershire. It had been stolen out of its nest by some boys, and I found it lying on the ground, being so young it could not fly. I need not go into particulars of how I cared for and fed it, but we got to think a great deal of it. For six months of the year (March to Sept.) it would come to the side of the cage every morning for my husband to stroke its head. It would go to sleep clinging on to the wires. We also had a dog, and whenever a strange cat came into the yard, the Sparrow had a certain chirp which sounded like "Nellie," which was the dog's name, and strange to say the dog knew the call, and was soon in the yard.

A Keeper of Cuckoos for Thirty Years.

Sir,—Seeing in Cage Birds that Mrs. Sargeant has lost her Cuckoo, nearly five years old, I should like to tell you that I once kept one to about the same age—mine wanted about one month of being five years old. It never called "Cuckoo." I have been keeping these birds for the last thirty years, however, and I once had one call "Cuckoo" the same as those out of doors. That bird died when it was two years old, owing to being kept in too warm a kitchen. I saw it sitting with its mouth open (it was too hot). It died suddenly, for it had been calling quite freely the day before. I have kept them from about one month up to the one which was five years old. I have had more than twenty, I believe. I have two last year birds alive now, and I lost one last year, three years old. I shall be very pleased if you think it worth while to put this in your valuable paper.

Eggs from a Rock Parrot.

Sir,—On Saturday last, April 5, I came across an unusual incident. A gentleman at Kingswear has an Indian Rock Parrot, which has laid five eggs in the bottom of her cage. I wish your paper every success.

The Seed Supply in an Aviary.

Sir,—In reply to the enquiry of your correspondent, "E.A.K.," the following arrangement has for years given every satisfaction in my outdoor aviary, containing a mixed collection of British Finches. It is nothing more elaborate than an inverted common flower-pot, about a foot high, placed on the floor of the aviary with an ordinary flower-pot saucer placed upon it. The day's supply of mixed seed—roughly, a desertspoonful each bird—ascertained by experience of their appetites, is placed in the saucer, and spread out in it as much as possible. This prevents the necessity for any bird to scatter the seed in search for its favourites, and at the end of each day the saucer should be empty, and practically no waste incurred. If a sufficiently wide and deep saucer is used, mice cannot possibly reach the seed. The supply of heating seed should, of course, be regulated according to the seasons, and if British are kept, a liberal supply of hemp should be allowed in the depth of winter if the flight is small.

A Letter from the Chief Secretary,

Sir,—My attention has been drawn to a correspondence which has been published in the recent issues of your paper with reference to the work of this society. I should like first of all to correct the mis-statement made by Mr. Trower, which has already been referred to by the Countess von Hahn, in your issue of the 15th. The R.S.P.C.A. does not exist by getting convictions. It is a society for the prevention of cruelty, and we only take legal proceedings in cases that are so bad as to necessitate such a course. Mr. Trower says that the society very seldom cautions. As a matter of fact, the cautions issued by the R.S.P.C.A. numbered during the past year 25,659, as against 6,906 convictions. These figures should be sufficient to contradict the misleading statement above referred to, and any unbiassed person will acknowledge that the society's chief work, in addition to its educational propaganda, is to give advice and cautions through its inspectors. Another correspondent, Mr. T. Pearson, in your issue of March 8th, is entirely in error in his remarks when he refers to "Mr. Moxey, the society's inspector." The society never had an inspector of that name, nor was the case referred to one taken up by this society. Hence his remark that there "is need for the society to compel its inspectors to speak the truth" is uncalled for, and I think it might more suitably refer to your correspondent. The society is not against the caging of birds, but it is certainly against the keeping of wild bred birds in captivity, and the cruelty involved in capturing them. As a society, we are always ready to help animal lovers with advice, but I think it is expecting too much of the R.S.P.C.A. to overlook the systematic neglect of birds in cages when such cases come to our notice. Rather should it be one of the duties of a paper with so wide an influence as your own to impress upon bird fanciers and dealers to keep their birds in a clean and healthy condition.

Edward G. Fairholme,
Chief Secretary.

MULE BREEDING EXTRAORDINARY.

Brother fanciers: I have been asked to say a few words on Mule and Hybrid breeding, which I trust will be of some little benefit to the Fancy. I might say I was reared amongst birds; in fact, in the bird business. I have seen Mules bred year after year from childhood. I have myself bred and exhibited almost every known cross, and won at leading shows throughout the country. In the middle of the winter, after getting together a few of the best hens your pocket will allow (yellows preferred, and as large as possible), you must turn your attention to the British birds you intend to use. You need not be frightened at getting a few more than you think you will require, as you will no doubt lose one or two before sorting time. What I mean by sorting time is this: I examine my Britishers about the end of March, when those that are well "sprung" are the ones to keep. Clear the others out, as it would take half the summer to make them breed.

In the Long Ago.

Before the passing of the Wild Bird Protection Act of 1880, I was taught a far easier system by my father, which I carried out at times myself. Have one hen in a quiet place, out from amongst your other birds, and start her nesting. As soon as she has been carrying building material a few days, off you go for your cock bird. You have him marked. He may have a nice little home in some country lane. You catch him as early as you can in the morning, get away home, and put him along with the hen, with plenty of food on the cage bottom. Then clear away and leave them quiet. You will not fail to have fertile eggs. When your hen has laid her third egg, you probably have another building in the room wherein you keep your stock. Transfer your cock to this hen, and nineteen times out of twenty he will breed well all the season for you.

With birds we have kept from the winter, we have to work a little differently. Never let your cock bird get paired with any one hen from the commencement. Keep moving him two or three times a day to different hens. As a rule I run nine or ten hens with one cock. I have reared as any as seventy-five young off one Linnet, besides a friend of mine rearing about a dozen off the same cock, in one season. Do not think this is going to kill your cock bird; far from it. If you leave him with one hen all the while she is building, she is "calling" every few minutes; therefore divide his energy.

Hybrid pairs are different. I prefer pairing these about Christmas, as you have not got the domesticated Canary as one partner. If you are thinking of trying the Bullfinch hen, get a supply of building material, such as old heather, broken into fine twigs. Then tear up a cokernut fibre door-mat, so as to supply fibre for her to line with. As green food, use shepherd's purse, and dandelion (white tops). Watch your birds' droppings; if they are getting too loose, just colour the drinking water with carbonate of iron for one day. If otherwise, about as much Epsom salts as will lie on a sixpence, given for one day.

When You have Young Hybrids.

Should any of you be fortunate enough to get some young Hybrids, if possible, put the young at once to a hen that has been feeding young three or four days, as the hen is then feeding coarser, and more to the nature of the young Hybrids. Of course, move the hen's own young. Failing this, hand-feed the young Hybrids for a day or two.

If you happen to have a hen egg bound (but be quite sure before you interfere), place her in your left hand, and, holding the tail up by the right, dip her vent into a saucer of warm water. Let it remain a few minutes, then lift gently out. The hen will be "working" to get clear of the egg; press gently behind the egg when the hen is trying to relieve herself. Hold her close to the saucer, and the egg will go into the water, without injury in most cases, and the hen be relieved of what may kill her, or ruin her for the remainder of the season.

A good number of questions were afterwards asked, which Mr. Fisher very ably answered. A vote of thanks to Mr. Fisher brought to a close a very enjoyable and interesting lecture. —J. Bostock, Hon. Sec.

British Birds and their Nests.

A Lecture by Mr. G. Crabb before the members of the Highgate, Hampstead C.B.A.

The study of the nests and nesting places of British birds is a most interesting phase of ornithology. It is perhaps matter for some regret, from an educational point of view, that the many ornithological societies in existence in various parts of the country do not devote as much attention to this and similar aspects of bird life as they might. Happily one meets, here and there, with a cage-bird society which gives a thought to the wider educational possibilities of its mission. Thus it was a pleasure to listen to a lecture given before a large audience at the Highgate, Hampstead, and Dis. C.B.A., by Mr. Geo. Crabb (President of the London and Provincial O.S.).

A Liking for the Uncommon.

By the aid of lantern slides interest was sustained for quite a couple of hours, during which we were shown many delightful pictures. Among these was the nest of a Hedge Sparrow in an old boot. The bird had fixed its nest right against the inside of the heel of the boot, in a most curious fashion, and there was rearing its brood. A Swallow's nest in a belfry, and the Swallow passing by the bell with food for its young; a Sparrow's nest fixed in the mouth of one of the carved figures in the masonry, probably on the Thames Embankment, where the bird seemed quite at home; a nest securely affixed to the fungi growing round a tree; another, that of the Song Thrush, snugly ensconsed in the horn casing of a horse's hoof, in the nest being a good clutch of eggs. A Great Tit's nest in a flower-pot, showed the pot turned upside down, the bird entering through the drainage hole, constructing its nest inside, and safely rearing its brood. Mr. Crabb had found a Robin's nest in a disused watering-can at Hampstead two years ago, and thought this by no means an unusual selection of breeding quarters by the Redbreast; a remark which does not apply to the discovery of the nest of the same bird placed carefully in an old disused earthenware coffee-pot.

We were then taken through a long list of familiar British birds, and shown their normal and natural haunts and nesting places, from the smallest of the Wrens to the Kestrel and the Osprey; from the trustful, saucy Sparrow, to the wild and intrepid Stormy Petrel. Speaking of the Wheatear as one of the earliest of the migrants, Mr. Crabb said Hampstead Heath was one of the places where it appears as early as anywhere. The Warblers and their nests passed in review, with a reference to what was generally termed the Hedge Sparrow, whose eggs were of the palest blue. The term Hedge Sparrow is unfortunate, said Mr. Crabb, for the bird is not a Sparrow at all, but one of the Warblers.

The Prettiest Nest of All.

A Long-tailed Tit, with her prettiest of all nests, in a bush of gorse; the Great Tit's nest in a tree hollow; the Cole, Marsh, and Blue Tits, each came in for recognition. The Nuthatch, a climber, had the peculiarity that it moved backwards and forwards, head down; it was to be found frequently in Richmond Park, and similar places the Wrens, Wagtails, the Pipits—the distinction between the Tree Pipit and the Meadow Pipit being that the back claw is longer and straighter in the Meadow than in the Tree Pipit.

The Red-backed Shrike came in for notice, with its predilection for establishing a "larder" by catching a lot of flies and impaling them on thorns until required for food.

The Britisher and Some Others.

Speaking of the birds of colour, Mr. Crabb said there had been some controversy about the Goldfinch, as to its nationality when on exhibition. Many exhibitors got hold of what they termed a typical Goldfinch, and if it got beaten at a show, the remark about its conqueror was "Oh! it's a Foreigner!" The Siberian Goldfinch is recognised as a different type of Finch altogether—larger, and with more white in its markings. The Russian Goldfinch is smaller and carries more brown on the breast than the Siberian. The Goldfinch found here is smaller still, and has more breast brown. But there is migration to be taken into account, and interbreeding, it being consequently in many cases rendered difficult to establish actual nationality. The Bullfinch, Linnet, Jay, Jackdaw, the Wryneck (or "Cuckoo's Mate") the Woodpeckers, and many others, with their nesting places, were reviewed to the intense delight of an attentive audience.

At the close of Mr. Crabb's most interesting address, of which we have only been able to give a brief resume, Mr. Geo. Gardner, who presided, moved a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer, and to Mr. C. W. Law, who kindly arranged for the lecture and provided the slides and the operator. This was very heartily received by those present.

INTERESTING AND NOVEL DEBATE HELD BY THE SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

THE monthly meeting of the Sheffield C.B.S. held at the Wentworth Cafe, March 3rd, proved to be one of the best and most interesting ever held—the best, because of the happy relations that existed amongst us, and the election of nine new members (Messrs. J. Jack, S. Richards, F. Gregory, H. Hobson, A. W. Sparks, A. Simpson, J. W. Varley, W. Wragg, and A. Hartley), the most interesting because we had the treat of the session in the "humorous" debate of our two members, Messrs. W. Bingham and J. G. Cowley, entitled "The Norwich Canary versus the Yorkshire Canary." Everything passed off in the best possible manner, and our President, Mr. F. Jones, had a right happy time. The meeting decided that Mr. Cowley should lead off, so the Norwich scored to start with.

Blowing the Yorkshire Away!

Mr. Cowley said: Mr. President and fellow fanciers, In championing the Norwich Canary against the Yorkshire breed, nothing could be more pleasant to me. The Norwich Canary as exhibited to-day, must undoubtedly be given the premier place. Just close your eyes to everything other than the subject under discussion, and imagine you are beholding the noble outline of our present day tip-top Norwich Canary. Look at his beautiful head and neck, his bold, fearless eye, his broad back, his short compact wings, short, well carried tail, and lovely rounded chest, also his brilliant blaze of plumage (no other variety can compare in this), and every one of you I venture to say must admit, that here we have the "Nut of all the Nuts." Don't forget his captivating grace, as he takes the perches in his show cage; his every movement justly claims for him pre-eminence and fame beyond the reach of Yorkshire birds.

Methinks I see again the last show held in the Temperance Hall, Sheffield, where so many present here to-night beheld the ideal I am endeavouring to justify, in the winner in the clear buff Norwich class. Why, even our most ardent Yorkshire exhibitors here to-night could be seen admiring this beautiful bird. Time and time again, as they wandered about the show, you could see even these men as they met their various friends practically lead them by the hand to behold this beautiful specimen of the Norwich breed, the bird that undoubtedly must be claimed as the bird of all birds.

I do not desire to say anything detrimental to the foe of to-night. I refer, of course, to the Yorkshire Canary, because he is so slender and delicate looking that we would only need to trumpet our cause a little boisterously, and I am afraid he would be blown away! I feel sure the entrancing charms, the superiority of our favourite, will accomplish the same end—I mean, Mr. Chairman, that at the close of our discussion the Norwich Canary must be proclaimed the most popular and useful bird of the two.

Helpful to Others.

Here are a few very important reasons why one must support my argument. First, the usefulness of the Norwich type of Canary to aspiring exhibitors other than the purely Canary fancier. I claim that all our brother fanciers whose one desire is to produce the winning Mule or Hybrid must naturally support our side, because of the usefulness of the Norwich type to them. I ask, Mr. Chairman, which bird do they use along with the various species of British birds in order to top the poll on the show bench? The answer is, of course, the beautiful Norwich type. Why, because of his jaunty appearance and type, from which more advantages are gained than from any other breed. Reason No. 2 is the very exalted position we find our hero occupies at a great many of the very large shows when the specials for the best Canary are being allocated. Look at the Great National show, held in Bradford last show season. Who was the conquering hero there? Who won the special for best Canary? What! you say, in Bradford, the home of the Yorkshire Canary? Yes, you may well stare but methinks our hero claimed the plum.

Reason No. 3. When you are procuring new blood to introduce in your stock, you get more for your money, more to look at, more to handle, than when you purchase the slim, tender, fragile, delicate-looking Yorkshire bird. As a warning, let me beg of you not to be misled by anything our Yorkshire champion may say, but judge his actions rather than his words. Look, I say, how even this advocate of the Yorkshires, evidently not fully satisfied with the breed he is claiming to be superior, occasionally exhibits a Mule showing most decidedly the Norwich type, which he evidently has a little liking for himself. Support the bird held in high esteem by the distinguished fanciers present here to-night, as shown by the colours in the coats (the lecturer had bedecked his supporters with yellow ribbon), men who have bred and exhibited this wonderful bird successfully, some who have even bred the Yorkshire bird successfully, but have evidently found the same wanting.

The Muse Invoked.

Mr. Chairman, I claim there must be something in our favour in this respect, for several fanciers known to us all as men who know the right thing when they see it, have even in my memory dropped the Yorkshire specimen completely out of their keeping (myself included), but they have ever kept the bold and fearless Norwich as their pet. To the Novice I would say, there is no variety of Canary more prolific, none more engaging, none more robust, none more taking to the eye, and none so likely to give you such pleasure in your hobby as the Norwich. Fanciers, keep the thoughts of our ideal candidate in your eye, and then, gentlemen, I have no hesitation in saying our advocate must, and will, succeed.

The Norwich Canary I claim to be King,
O'er brothers and sisters, thick ones or thin,
His "John Bull" appearance,
O'er foemen so slim
Stands aloft—who denies it? -
While the Yorkshire grows dim.

The applause as Mr. Cowley finished was loud and long, and during his speech he was continually backed up by his supporters. He named as his seconder Mr. J. Woolhouse, who ably "held the fort," and showed without any doubt which is the best variety, he also having kept the long ones, so able to speak from experience.

The Yorkshire Champion takes the Field.

After he had finished, Mr. Bingham, proceeded with his reply, and said:—Mr. Chairman, I take it that my duty to-night in this discussion is to point out to you all where the Yorkshire excels over the Norwich Canary. Now I have in some respects set myself a very difficult problem, but in others it is easy of solution. The first question, Mr. Chairman, is the name. The two varieties we are discussing are named each after the respective county from which it is supposed to have originated. I take it then, that in name alone I have a great advantage over my opponent, as the County of Yorkshire, stands for everything that is large and noble and good—except large Canaries, for which Norwich alone is famous. Now, to be strictly fair to my opponent, I ought to acknowledge that a matter of 50 years ago the arguments were entirely on his side, both as regards build, shape, and colour, the Norwich of those days being, to my mind, far in front of the Yorkshires at that time, and also in front of the Norwich of the present time, in which I think every good point has been sacrificed for the sake of size and colour.

But to come down now to present-day Canaries, the saying that comparisons are odious is fully bourne out when considering this subject from the point of beauty. If you take the best that can be produced from each variety and place them before an impartial judge, it will always be a case of Yorkshires 1st, and the rest nowhere. I expect that our friend, Mr. Cowley, will enlarge on the good points that the Norwich Canary ought to possess, and I don't envy him his task. The Norwich Canary in every particular except size, comes second to the Yorkshire. Speaking of size reminds me of a tale about an Irishman who, when building a wall, built it 3ft. high and 4ft. thick, and when asked his reason for building a wall of such dimensions, said he expected it would get blown over, then it would be a good wall 4ft. high. So it is with the Norwich Canary; they are "tall across," and the expression oft used when speaking of them, "big, bouncing bird," covers all their faults and beauty.

Comparisons that are Odious.

I don't think, Mr. Chairman, it is necessary for me to extol the many good points that the Yorkshire Canary possesses; I will allow the expressions used by our leading judges and writers in the Fancy Press to speak for them. I will also show you where the same judges and writers with their expressions condemn the Norwich. Speaking of the Yorkshires, how often you see the terms: "Gentlemen of the Fancy," "The bird of grace and beauty," 'Stands like a guardsman," "A charming damsel," and last but not least, "full of swagger"—(allow me to remind you, gentlemen, that action speaks loudest). What do we find with the Norwich, and from the same judges and writers? Such terms as "Short, chubby ones," "A ball of fire," and the report of the last Palace show began with "Birds of the bulldog breed." Such terms when looked closely into condemn the variety to which they are applied. "Balls of fire"—a fine term surely to tack on to a show bird as its only recommendation. If applied to the artist, or vendor of colour food, it would be much more appropriate, and would be giving the honour where it was due. "Birds of the bulldog breed," another expression used to try to convey to the public the beauty of the variety to which it is attached. Now, if there is anything more ungainly or ugly than a British bull-dog, I have failed to locate it. I have here a picture of a specimen to which the Norwich is compared (the lecturer then handed round a picture of the bull-dog, amidst roars of laughter, mostly from the Yorkshire men). "Where beauty lies" ought to be the title of it.

"Out of its Own Mouth."

These expressions from judges lead us when comparing the two birds to another source, out of which the Norwich is condemned. In the standard which is drawn up on their behalf we find 15 points for colour, which placed against the five points for colour in the Yorkshire standard, clearly shows us that it is not the bird alone, but its food that has a very large share in any honour it may earn. Another factor that tells against the Norwich very strongly, is the Standard Show Cage, but those responsible for the drawing up of this cage evidently knew the ungainly, shambling, slovenly occupant that it was to hold. We have a cage 4½in. wide to hold a 6½in. bird, and with wires only at the front. The bird, if able, has not room to turn around to show its so-called graceful form, evidence that its "cribbed, cabined, and confined" occupant, would not come out very high up if judged solely on its merits against the sprightly, active, tight feathered, and upstanding Yorkie, in its all wire cage, where its every good quality can be perfectly seen and admired. A thing of beauty is a joy for ever. Which is the more prolific of the two kinds? Which is the better from a commercial or money-making standpoint? And there are other points which, however, I must leave, having taken up sufficient of your time. Let me impress upon you in conclusion that of the two varieties mentioned from a view-point of beauty the Yorkshire Canary stands supreme.

As Mr. Bingham resumed his seat he was loudly applauded for his very fine effort to overthrow the Norwich. His seconder, Mr. J. Thorpe, also did his best to turn the votes towards the thin ones. He kept the meeting in a good humour, and altogether did very well.

The meeting was now thrown open, and a very interesting discussion was held, Messrs. A. Hobson, G. Drabble, and W. Kelley, amongst others taking part, after which, the lecturers both replied. Mr. Cowley mounted a chair, and in real electioneering style, claimed support for his favourite. Mr. Bingham followed, after which a vote was taken, when to the surprise of the meeting the Yorkshire men won! But a little explanation afterwards showed that the Norwich men had "turned traitors" for once, voting Yorkshire to cheer the other side up a bit!

A hearty vote of thanks was proposed by our President, Mr. F. Jones, to the lecturers, for giving us such a treat, this was seconded by Mr. A. Hobson, and supported by Mr. J. Thorpe. Our friends, Mr. Bingham and Mr. Cowley, suitably replied. Don't forget meeting, May 1st, another treat in store, all fanciers welcome.—J. Woolhouse, Assist. Sec.

LEIGH AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A very successful table show of British birds was held in the headquarters on April 2nd, when some very fair birds were put down to be judged by Mr. W. Ordish, whose awards gave every satisfaction. 1, hc, Seddon, Goldfinch, Linnet; 2, Charleson, Starling; 3, vhc, Gaskell Bros., Greenfinch, Chaffinch; c, J. Hamer, Goldfinch. On April 16th, Mr. P. Hart is giving a lecture on British Birds, and I hope as many members and friends as possible will make a special effort to attend, as Mr. Hart has promised to answer as many questions as may be asked, according to his ability. R. Charleson.

EAST STANLEY EMPIRE WORKMEN'S CLUB C.B.S.

At a meeting held in Club Room of Empire Workmen's Club, Front Street, West Stanley, April 2nd, it was decided to have our fifth annual show on November 22nd and 23rd, in the hall adjoining club premises. Mr. Wm. Butler and Mr. Bewicke, of Newfield were nominated as judges. Mr. Wm. Stephenson was elected chairman; Mr. J. Emmerson vice-chairman; Mr. J. Smith, treasurer; Wm. Robinson, sec., and a working committee of the following: Messrs. J. Boyle, J. Emmerson, J. Elliott, J. Almond, J. Stephenson, and E. Heskeys.—Wm. Robinson, Sec.

BOOTLE C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held April 4th, in St. Andrew's Parochial Hall, this being our first meeting in the new quarters. There was a fair attendance, and the members showed their delight in having such splendid rooms at their disposal. Mr. Hurst (Accrington) was elected to judge nest feather show and Mr. Cowgill annual old show. It was decided to make 4 Norwich classes, 2 clears, etc., and 2 green; also 4 classes heavily varieg. Yorks for novices (if these classes do not fill to amalgamate with champions). We also added 4 classes for Borders, 2 clears and 2 green for nest feather show only. Judge, J. W. Metcalfe has kindly consented to give us a lecture on general management at next meeting, May 6th, so let us have bumper meeting, for it will be greatly to your advantage. The society is showing a big improvement; several new members have joined this year, and there are now about 50 members on the books.—L. S. Hamilton, Hon. Sec.

HETTON-LE-HOLE C.B.S.

Meeting held March 29th at the Club House, Mr. J. Appleby in the chair, and a good attendance of members. Decided to hold Young Bird Show July 5th. Mr. A. J. Notley was elected to judge. After business the members and a few friends sat down to supper provided by Mr. and Mrs. McCabe, and after ample justice had been done to this, the rest of the evening was spent in enjoyment, the principal item being the presenting of the President's cup to the winner, Mr. H. Wilson. Mr. Wilson has won it three times in succession, and it now becomes his own property. We raise our hats to you, Mr. Wilson. After a most appropriate speech our President, Councillor F. Piper, promised another to be competed for at our next annual show. The following contributed towards the harmony of the evening: Messrs. R. Spence, J. Hacket, G. Vipond, M. Tonks, and E. McCabe, the latter of whom entertained with a few selections on the gramophone. A most enjoyable evening was brought too quickly to a close by "Old Father Time."—A. J. Notley, Sec.

WIMBLEDON C.B.S.

There was a record gathering of some 60 or more at the usual monthly meeting, held at 6, The Broadway, and of those present nearly one-half were ladies. Mr. W. H. Stoakley presided, and the chief event of the evening was a lecture by Mr. J. Robson on "Breeding and care of young birds." Mrs. Griffiths was added to the list of Vice-Presidents in recognition of her many services to the society; one new member was elected, and there were three nominations for membership. Medals won at the pair show were presented, the one for best pair in the show going to Mr. G. W. Saunders, and for the best pair shown by a lady to Mrs. L. M. Thynne; the prize for the judging competitions was won by Mr. E. Gibbs with a total of 13 points. Votes of thanks to t auditors were heartily given. The meeting confirmed the action of the committee in arranging for the annual show to be held Oct. 21st and 22nd, the engaging of Queen's Hall, the appointment of Messrs. Frostick, Robson and Mundell as three of the judges, and the application for the patronage at the show of the various specialist societies as hitherto. Principal subject for the May meeting, an egg-food making competition, the winner to be settled by the vote of those present, and Mrs. Griffiths, Mr. Jay, Mr. Newley, Mr. Whittome, Mr. Davis, and Mr. Nash promised to take part. The Secretary announced that Miss Durham, of the John Innes Horticultural Institute, had recently brought back with her from Teneriffe some specimens of the wild Canary, and had also obtained some white Canaries from Mrs. Martin, of New Zealand. She had kindly promised to bring the white Canaries and the wild specimens, if she was sucessful in acclimatising them, for the members to see, besides giving another lecture at a later date. —H. Smith, Hon. Sec.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

The best bird's meeting ever held in Sheffield took place April 1st, the Vice-Chairman, Mr. J. Woodall, presiding. Members turned up in full force (about 70) and if our meetings are much larger we shall have to find fresh headquarters. The great attraction was a table show of British birds and a lecture on what constitutes ideal specimens, by that enthusiast, Mr. H. J. Chick, of Nottingham. Three classes were originally decided upon, but owing to such a large entry it was decided to add an extra class (total, 44 exhibits, including 3 Palace winners). At the conclusion of judging Mr. Chick was asked several questions, which he answered in masterly manner. He was also asked to point out in what form the winning birds beat their rivals, all of which was very instructive, especially from a novice point of view. After satisfying all present, he commenced one of the most practical lectures it has ever been our good fortune to listen to, one of the interesting parts being a number of framed prints and drawings of noted winners, all of which showed the various points it is necessary to get in an exhibition specimen. The lecture was thoroughly enjoyed by all. So keen was Mr. Chick on his subject that he had to be reminded of the time, and as the law shows no consideration (even to keen fanciers) we had to be outside by 11 o'clock, and he had to make an abrupt close. A vote of thanks, proposed by Mr. P. Walsh, and seconded by Mr. Tow, brought this most successful meeting to a close. Result of show:—LINNET, Etc.: 1, 2, hc, P. Walsh, Linnet and Siskin; 3, W. Baxby, Twite; vhc, Colton; c, Fletcher. BULLF., Etc.: 1, 3, hc, Fletcher, Bullie; 2, Wright, Goldie; vhc, Walsh; c, Linley. A.O.V. HARDBILL: 1, Milne, Hawfinch; 2, hc, Walsh, Chaffie; 3, vhc, Fletcher, Greenie; c, Baxby. SOFTBILL: 1, Walsh, Waxwing; 2, 3, hc, c, Fletcher, Tree Pipit and Black Redstart; vhc, Milne.

WIVELISCOMBE F.A.

The Rev. Howard McCririck (President) presided over the annual meeting. The balance-sheet for the past year, showing a favourable balance of £14 18s. 2d., was presented; this was considered very satisfactory. Messrs. E. W. Dascombe and C. H. Hill were re-elected hon. secs. The rules were revised, it being decided to revert to the old 7 miles' radius for membership, and also that members should be allowed to join the Association up to the advertised date of closing entries, instead of one month before the show, as formerly. It was resolved to hold the next annual show on November 20th next. Other hon. secs. please note.—C. H. Hill and E. W. Dascombe, Hon. Secs.

CITY OF BRADFORD O.S.

Meeting held at the Flying Dutchman, Leeds Road, Bradford, April 5th. A nice gathering of members was present. The Chairman, Mr. W. Moremont, opened the meeting as usual. Two new members were duly enrolled. The election of judges for the season's shows, which was left unfinished at the last meeting, owing to insufficient time, was continued. Many congratulations were passed to the Chairman on his winning the silver cup given by the Yorkshire Green Marked Club, which he had kindly brought to the meeting to show to the members. Feelings of sympathy were expressed by several members of the Society in reference to the trying ordeal which our brother fanciers at Gateshead are at present undergoing, and at the suggestion of one of the members a subscription was started which resulted in the sum of 10s. being raised at the meeting, to be handed over to the Gateshead Society's subscription list. Promises of specials by some of the members concluded a very interesting meeting.—P. N. Jenkinson, Assist. Sec.

IDLE AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

At the White Bear Inn, on April 2nd, this Society was favoured with a lecture on inbreeding by the worthy President (Mr. C. A. House). There was only a moderate attendance owing to the inclemency of the weather, but the verdict of those present was that it was a rare treat, owing to the lucid and efficient manner in which the theory and practice of this controversial subject were expounded. It was a lecture of first-hand knowledge, the speaker having proved the subject up to the hilt by his own personal experience. After having reviewed the results obtained, assisted by pedigrees, with horses, cattle, poultry and pigeons, we arrived at Canaries. Mr. House illustrated to those present in an unmistakable manner, the mode of procedure, showing what was and what was not inbreeding, also the methods adopted by the various breeders of all live stock. After a lecture of one hour and a half's duration we had a few minutes' interval, during which Mr. C. E. Hylton, Sec., announced that the lecturer would answer any question or point that had not been made clear to anyone present. Only about six questions were asked and answered, which showed that a very wide field of this interesting subject had been fully covered, and that few phases of the subject had been neglected. Those in our district will realise that they are the losers in not being present to hear the pros and cons of the subject. A vote of thanks was accorded Mr. C. A. House, on the motion of Mr. C. E. Hylton, seconded by Mr. F. Studd, and ably supported by Mr. T. Elsegood, by saying he had heard the subject debated in such masterly style.—C. E. Hylton, Sec.

REDCAR C.B.S.

Meeting held March 29th, at Crown and Anchor, Mr Metcalf in the chair. Decided to hold first feather show, June 7th, and that Mr. Milburn should be asked to judge. Classification as follows: Yorks. yell., cock or hen; buff ditto; novice yell. or buff; Norwich, yell., cock or hen; buff ditto; Mule or Hybrid, A.O.V. Can. Linnet; A.O.V. British. Next meeting will be held April 12th, at 7.30, Crown and Anchor, when we shall be pleased to see any intending members who can obtain full particulars from the Sec., C. Mallory, 17, Lilton Street, Redcar.

LONDON C.B.A.

Commitee meeting held at The Feathers, Great Chapel Street, S.W., April 2. The committee unanimously agreed to recommend Mr. James Bray, jun., to the annual general meeting for the position of Sec. to the Association. Nominations for judges for the annual show were received. It was also arranged to meet the sub-committee of the Foreign Bird Exhibitors' League, to discuss their proposed classification for foreign birds which they hope the L.C.B.A. will adopt at the annual show. Several other important items were settled in connection with the annual show. F. Knight.

HORNSEY, WOOD GREEN, C.B.S.

At the last meeting of this society Mr. G. Gardner delivered a lecture on "British Birds." The Hon. Sec. (Mr. P. Brooks) had failed to secure the services of a lecturer for the evening, so Mr. Gardner stepped into the breach and spoke for close upon an hour upon the Goldfinch, the Chaffinch, Hawfinch, Bramblefinch, Linnet, Greenfinch, Bullfinch, Thrush, Blackbird, Wagtails, Buntings, Redpolls, Siskins, etc., their points of perfection, the mode of keeping them in captivity, wild seed foods, etc. At the close a hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer, and a very pleasant meeting well attended, terminated.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held April 3rd, Mr. T. C. Crawhall in chair. It was arranged to have another social later on. Also agreed to have a picnic. A subcommittee was appointed to make arrangements. A vote of sympathy was passed to Gateshead Society on their recent police court case. Mr. J. Chirnside and Mr. Matthews, both of Newcastle, were elected members. Mr. Gill (Hancock Museum) gave us a lecture on "The Structure of Birds." He dealt with the subject in a masterly manner, and showed he had a good grasp of his subject. He was listened to very attentively by the large company present. At the close a number of questions were asked and answered. Those who had the misfortune to miss this lecture missed a treat. Mr. Gill was accorded a hearty vote of thanks, and in reply said it had been a pleasure to him to come amongst us. We trust at not a very distant date he will give us another lecture, when we hope that those who missed this treat will make a big effort to attend. Subscriptions are due, and I will be pleased to receive same.—J. W. Reed, Sec.

NEW CROSS C.B.S.

Meeting held at headquarters April 3rd, a fair number of members being present. Preliminary business was got through with great dispatch. A letter from Mr. Hill resigning the chair was read, but the members were against accepting his resignation, and he was aked to reconsider his decision, which he did, greatly to the satisfaction of everyone. Owing to special pressure of business, Mr. Trower was unable to be present to give us the lecture he had promised, so Mr. Frank Cole, of Dulwich, kindly obliged. The best thanks of the Society are due to Mr. Cole for coming at such short notice and his kindness is appreciated by the members. Mr. Cole gave us a lecture on "Breeding and Rearing Canaries,' which proved highly interesting and instructive. He took us step by step through the work in the breeding-room for the whole of the season, telling us what to do and what to avoid. He told us how to pair up the old birds, how to feed them, what to do in the case of egg-binding, and how to treat other difficulties which may arise, in a manner which was easily understood by all. He told us how to feed the youngsters and how to mix the egg-food, samples of which he had brought with him and which were carefully examined by all present. He afterwards invited questions which members took advantage of by bombarding him with queries, all of which he ably answered. Replying to a vote of thanks, Mr. Cole said he was pleased to have been with us, and thanked us for the kind way in which we had received him; if we had learned anything from his remarks that evening he was amply repaid for any trouble he may have been put to. Amid applause the meeting came to a close. We think when members, who were not present, know what they have missed they will turn up in force on May 1st, when we are to have a lecture by Mr. Norman. We made one new member, Mr. Gardiner, of East Dulwich; our membership is creeping up nicely, but we want a lot more yet.—Burton Bros., Hon. Secs.

MIDDLESEX O.S.

A Few Words on Canary Breeding.

Meeting held April 3rd, when a lecture was to have been given by Mr. J. Shepherd, but owing to indisposition he was unable to be present. The Chairman suggested that the Secretary (Mr. Jeffery Jefferis) should fill the gap, and this was carried unanimously. Mr. Jefferis said he had been called upon somewhat unexpectedly and therefore had had no time to prepare a lecture. He proposed to say a few words upon Canary breeding, this being the commencement of the season. He proposed to give his own experience without any wish to dictate, and advised those that were doing well with their own methods to let well alone, but if their method was not altogether successful, then it was time to try something else. Mr. Jefferis said birds should not be forced into breeding condition, and that providing the stock was properly looked after during the winter months, nature would bring them into the proper condition at the right time. The time to pair up is from the middle of March to the beginning of April. After having explained the feeding of the pairs, period of incubation, testing the eggs, etc., he next dealt with the youngsters. Early in the morning of the day the eggs are due to hatch he supplies a small quantity of egg food made in the proportion of two Osborne biscuits to one egg, as he had found that by giving a good proportion of egg it increased size in the progeny. He did not mean it would make Canaries as large as pigeons, but in most varieties nowadays, size played an important point, and he was sure there was more nourishment in egg than in biscuit. Size, he went on to say, is made in the nest. By saying that he did not impute that a bird did not grow afterwards, but he did say that undoubtedly the size of a bird is determined to a great extent by what it eats and how it is fed before leaving the nest. He stated that he gave yolk and white of the egg right from hatching, and also supplied canary seed, German rape, and hemp (whole). Canary and rape ad lib, but limited the hemp. As a green food he gave watercress from the third day. When the young leave the parents he feeds on egg food and boiled German rape. His method of preparing the rape was to boil it for twenty minutes in a fine muslin bag; after this, give it a thorough cleansing under the tap; shake as much of the water away from it as possible, and then hang it up to drain. If this is done overnight it will be quite dry enough by the next morning. His birds do not get hard seed until they can crack it themselves, as he believes their digestive organs are not strong enough to take it until such time. He feeds alternately on the rape and egg food prepared as previously stated, giving about a teaspoonful of either to three birds, three times per day, and since adopting this plan his losses are very few. After answering a few questions, a vote of thanks to the lecturer was carried by acclamation.

SUTTON-IN-ASHFIELD (Eastfield Side) C.B.S.

A tripe supper was provided for the fanciers and their wives at the headquarters of the above society. Upwards of 40 sat down to an excellent repast, and great credit is due to Mr. and Mrs. Bradbury (the host and hostess). A concert was given after the tables had been cleared. Mr. Wright, the chairman, was in a happy vein, and he rendered some good comic songs. Mr. Bennett, of the Mansfield C.B.S., rendered a good song. R. Nuttall, Sec., also gave of his best, and the evening was brought to a close by a hearty vote of thanks to the host and hostess, being passed with musical honours.—B. Gabbitase, Press Corespondent.

PARTICK C.B.C.

Monthly meeting, held in the Foresters' Hall, Dumbarton Road, Partick, April 4, Mr. Fraser presiding over a good attendance. Agreed to leave classification for first feather show same as last year. It was agreed to hold our annual outing on Sunday, May 18, small committee being appointed to carry through same. A proposal that we hold open section for Yorks. at our annual show, and apply for patronage of Y.C.C. of Scotland was carried. British and Foreign bird show, held in connection with above, some 61 birds being staged. Mr. R. B. Gibb judged, and his awards were well received. FOR. GOLDF.: 1, Anderson; 2, Fraser; 3, Crammond; 4, Priest. BRIT. GOLD., OR BULL.: 1, 7, MacRobie; 2, McMillan; 3, 4, sp., Fraser; 6, Priest; 6, Anderson. LINNET: 1, Aitkenhead; 2, Crammond; 3, 7, Henry; 4, Fraser; 5, Priest; 6, Anderson. SISKIN: 1, Grant; 2, Webster; 3, 4, Fraser. REDPOLL: 1, 4, Webster; 2, Fraser; 3, Anderson; 5, Coates. TWITE: 1, sp., Webster; 2, Fraser; 3, Webster. GREEN.: 1, Webster; 2, 3, sp., 5, McMillan; 4, Aitkenhead. A.O.V. FINCH: 1, Priest; 2, Aitkenhead; 3, 6, Webster; 4, Anderson; 5, Fraser; 7, Grant. DARK MULE: 1, 2, 4, Webster; 3, Grant. LIGHT MULE OR HYB.: 1, Priest. FOREIGN: 1, 2, sp., Webster; 3, 4, Park. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Gibb for judging and Mr. Fraser for presiding, brought a pleasant evening to a close.—Wm. Priest, Sec.

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

Annual dinner held at headquarters, April 2. Mr. T. J. King occupied the chair in the absence of the President (Mr. W. Theobald). An excellent dinner was served. After the loyal toast had been duly honoured, the Chairman said he had received letters of apology for non-attendance from Mr. Theobald, Mr. Madagan, and Mr. Pounsett. The toast of "The Society" was entrusted to Mr. L. Short, who proposed it in a very neat speech, pointing out the advantages of belonging to such a society, both from a social and fancier's view, and said how much it had increased his interest in bird-keeping since he had joined. He coupled with the toast the name of the Hon. Sec., to whom he alluded in very eulogistic terms. Mr. Treasure, in replying, thanked Mr. Short for all the kind things he had said about the society and himself personally, and said the society was in a very good position, that a good number of new members had joined this year, and that as we had succeeded in the past so we should in the future if we all worked shoulder to shoulder with plenty of enthusiasm. He would like to say how sorry Mr. Madagan was at not being present, but he was called away on a business engagement. Mr. Pounsett, whose wife he regretted to say was very ill, was absent in consequence, and he was sure all the members joined with him in wishing her a speedy recovery. During the evening songs were sung by Messrs. King, Bastin, Lewis, Treasure, Brazener, C. Yiend and H. Yiend. Mr. Tarren acted as accompanist.—A. J. Treasure.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD, C.B.S.

A most instructive lecture was given March 31, which Mr. G. Crabb ably discoursed on British Birds and their Nests, illustrated by limelight views. A very large number of members and friends were present, some seventy in all. The following have joined the society: Messrs. Davey, G. Legate, H. Blight, A. R. Smith, Fike, Geo. Kirby, and Boothing.—J. Hyde, Sec. (A full report of the lecture appears elsewhere in this issue. Ed.)

READING C.B.S.

Usual monthly meeting held April 2nd, before a fair attendance. S. G. Oates was elected a member. A letter was read from Mrs. Noble, of Henley, consenting to allow members to view her aviaries on a date to be decided later. The resignation of our Treasurer (Mr. G. H. Acton) was announced by Mr. J. Brooker, who referred to the many acts of kindness we had received at his hands. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Acton, and the hope was expressed that we should see as much of him as formerly in view of the fact that he will still retain his membership. Mr. J. Brooker was then elected Treasurer for the remainder of the year. Questions relating to breeding and feeding were then passed round to members, and a general discussion ensued, which resulted in a pleasant evening. Next meeting, egg food making demonstration. Come along and show us all how you make it. W. H. Pyke, Hon. Sec.

LEICESTER (Hand-in-Hand) C.B.S.

Meeting held April 1st at headquarters, the Old White Swan, Market place. Mr. Gibbins presiding. Mr. J. Allen gave us a very interesting discourse on the Yorkshire Canary, displaying some old prints of the Yorkshire and Norwich 20 and 30 years ago. Mr. Allen began his lecture by reading extracts from the book written by the late Mr. Blaxton, explaining the points a good Yorkshire should possess, also dealing with the introduction of the Lancashire, Belgian, and Norwich into the variety. Mr. Allen then related some of the late Mr. Thackeray's exploits on the show bench, giving the results of several seasons' exhibiting. Mr. Allen having the receipts and expenditure of same in tabulated form at hand. It really seems incredible to fanciers of to-day that one man could have been so successful. Questions were invited to which Mr. Allen suitably replied. A lengthy discussion brought a very enjoyable evening to a close. E. Hulse, Press Correspondent.

HAMILTON CADZOW OAK O.S.

Meeting held in lesser Town Hall, March 29th. A good number of members put in an appearance, Mr. W. Shearer (President) in the chair. Mr. W. Haddow moved, and Mr. A. Cant seconded, that we hold an open young bird show, which was agreed to. The date was fixed for August 2. Classes: Nor. 4, Bord. 4. Hyb 2. Mr. D. Harper and Mr. C. Polock will judge, commencing at six, and we hope to see fanciers in the district patronise this venture. For our annual show to be held on November 8th, six judges were nominated for each section, and we have been successful again in getting the service of Mr. W. Watson, Kilmarnock, for Norwich; Mr. W. Mossie, Annbank, for Borders; and Mr. W. Clark, Larkhall, for British. These are well-known specialists and should draw a good entry from the readers of CAGE BIRDS. Classification was left over until the next meeting. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Shearer terminated the meeting.—G. Martin, Sec.

NORTH WALES C.B.S.

Committee meeting held April 5th, at the Assembly Rooms. Present: Chairman, Mr. James Jones; Hon. Treas., Mr. R. T. Edwards; Messrs. J. O. Parry, R. Green, E. Jones, J. W. Jones, E. Hughes, H. Williams. Sir T. E. Roberts, Lady Turner, and Mr. G. Brymer, jun., were elected Vice-Presidents. More replies are expected by the next meeting. A vote of thanks to the above for their acceptance of office was passed. A rule was added to the new members' rules cards as follows: That all exhibits shall be the bona-fide property of exhibitors, and shall have been in their sole possession for one clear month prior to the date of show. (Strictly enforced.) For 1913 and 1914 up to 1st of March, the committee have reduced the members' fees to 1s. instead of 1s. 6d. Entrance fee at open show is 1s.; non-members 1s. 3d.; so late members should join at once so that they can have full benefit, and they will be open to compete at the coming first feather show. Come, fanciers, and make it a record. The society depends on members, so the only thing for you to do is to send me your name and address, and a P.O. for 1s., and you will be a member up to 28th Feb., 1914. The Commitee passed vote of thanks to the delegates for 1912 for their services, but for this year the committee have done away with them, as they think to give a few lines at back of members' cards to show the benefit of becoming a member. Rule cards will be ready next week, but members may join at once. Next committee meeting will be held at the Committee Rooms, April 11, 7.30 sharp. I beg that the committee will all attend, so that they will have the full report of the election for 1913 and 1914. R. E. Griffith, Hon. Sec.

SOUTHERN NORWICH P.C.

On April 1, at the Ragland Hotel, a committee meeting was held, Mr. J. W. Ramsden in the chair. Present: Messrs. G. Crabb, J. Hodder, S. Gill, E. Baker, A. J. Kilby, G. W. Saunders, R. Pretty, J. Robson, and F. S. Matthes, and at the preliminary meeting also Messrs. Crawford and Hazell. New members elected on the 18th ult.: Messrs. McMillan, Redwood, Noyce, and Richards, and at this meeting: Messrs. Thurley, Coombs, and F. Marshall. The matter of the £10 10s. silver challenge cup, which has been the cause of much correspondence in the Fancy Press, was brought up, as Messrs. Gill and Baker were present. Mr. Gill placed before the committee the reason why he had thought it fit to open up the discussion, so that the matter might be brought before the officers of the society to investigate. The secretary then gave the reason why he had counted points in 1908-09 to Mr. Rennie, but legally Mr. Hodder had won the points that year in accordance with the resolution of the committee passed June 16th, 1909. Mr. Gill withdrew his claim after hearing the minutes of the various committees held since the formation of the society, which made the condition of the cup to abide by byelaw 7, and the Palace points, Feb. 4, 1909, as printed in L. and P.O.S. schedule. After further discussion, principally between those that had the most interest in the cup competition, Messrs. Gill, Baker, and Hodder withdrew their wins in the cup competition in order that the £10 10s. cup could again be put up for competition, and start on a fresh career, which all hoped would be more favourable than its former one. A most friendly feeling was shown by all present, and many hearty laughs were heard during the discussion, but the principal aim of the committee all through was that justice should be given to the winners of points for cup, according to the rules of the society. Proposed by Mr. J. Kilby, seconded by Mr. S. Gill, "That the new bylaw for the £10 10s. cup be as follows: 'That members must nominate four birds, by marking 'cup' against entries at the club shows, and points shall count as birds stand in their respective classes.'" Carried. Proposed, Mr. Matthes, seconded Mr. J. Robson, that for £3 3s. cup and other specials, any number of entries may be made, but only the three highest birds to count, two in cock classes, one in hen classes, each to be in a separate class. Carried. Proposed Mr. J. Robson, seconded Mr. G. Crabb, "That a hearty vote of thanks be given to the chairman." Carried.—F. S. Matthes, Hon. Sec.

P.S. I here might apologise to all concerned who had hoped to see me reply to letters in Press that contained my name. As secretary of the club, I did not feel it my duty to give any opinion in the matter, but state that as rule book had been issued in July, 1908, I should have sent to all members a printed form containing the bylaws made on Sept. 16, 1908, so that the misunderstanding could not have happened. I hope now the cup under the new bylaw (or the secretary) will have a most pleasant time.

COLINTON AND CURRIE PARISHES O.S.

Monthly meeting, held in the Drill Hall, Juniper Green, April 5, Mr. Begbie, president, in the chair. Decided to have classification as last year, also the old bird classes. Decided to keep the number of judges the same as last year also. It was also decided to add a class for Crest or Crestbred at our first feather show. A discussion then took place regarding the ramble, and it was fixed for July 12th, secretary being instructed to try to get permission to go through Dalmahoy Estate.—Jas. Napier, Sec.

PRESTON O.S.

Monthly meeting held April 1, in the meeting-room, the Tokio Cafe, Fishergate. The date for first feather show was fixed for June 28th. in St. Wilfrid's Rooms, Corporation Street. and Mr. F. Issott, one of our members, was appointed to judge. A trophy, value 15s., is given by the society for the best bird in the show, and another trophy, value one guinea, was promised by a member, Mr. R. Johnson, for amateur classes only. After the usual business was finished we had a very interesting discussion on pairing up, and the fertilisation of eggs. The discussion was opened out by our worthy chairman, Mr. T. H. Dent. T. Barton, Hon. Sec.

WEST FIFE C.B.L.

Meeting held in Masonic Arms, Cowdenbeath, April 5th, Mr. T. Wildridge (President) in the chair. Only half the delegates present. It was agreed to hold a first feather show in Cowdenbeath on July 5, judging to start at 3. It was also agreed that each society supply a judge from among their members, and the following were balloted: Kelty to supply judge for Scotch Fancy and Yorks; Dunfermline, Norwich Plainheads and Crests; Cowdenbeath, Border Fancy and A.O.V.; Lochgelly, Common Canary Mules and Brit. Classification was gone into, and it was agreed to give 23 classes. Scotch Fancy 2, Yorks 4, Plainheads 5. Crests 2, Bord 4, A.O.V. and common 1 each, Mules and British 4. Entry 6d. Prize money to be equal throughout. It was agreed that each society pay 5s. into League funds. Next meeting, May 3rd. The meeting closed with the usual vote of thanks to the Chairman.—Jas. Cordery, Sec.

YORKSHIRE C.C. OF SCOTLAND.

Meeting held in Neilson's Temperance Hotel, Glasgow, March 25. President Heggie presided over a moderate attendance. Decided to hold a first feather show June 28, and the hall at above address has been booked for the occasion. Dr. Syson was elected judge, and has accepted. Classification same as last year, as follows:—Cl. Yell., Cl. Buff, Tkd. Yell., Tkd. Buff, Varieg. Yell., Varieg. Buff. Fee, 6d. The club will give a silver medal for best bird in champion section, and the same in novice section; only rung birds may compete for these medals. Messrs. Heggie, Martin, and Crichton, intimated specials, and I will be glad if other members will kindly follow suit. Members who have not yet ordered rings might do so at once, instead of waiting until they are actually needing them. I try as far as possible to send them by return, but being often from home, cannot always guarantee to do so. New members elected: Messrs. Welsh, New, Galloway, Peters, Barrhead, and Kane, Clydebank. Prospective members can have every information from R. B. Gibb, 2, Alexandria Terrace, Govan, Hon. Sec.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Annual general meeting, Maskell Hotel, March 27, Mr. Whetton in the chair. A vote of condolence was passed to the family of the late Viscount Tredegar, he having been president of our society for a number of years. The notice of motion by Mr. Chedgey to rescind resolution passed at the previous meeting re 10s. 6d. special, on being put to the meeting was lost. The auditors, Messrs. H. C. Smith and A. Magg reported that books and balance sheets were correct. Mr. Smith said he was sorry to see so many arrears of contributions. He appealed to members to pay up. The secretary, on reading out balance sheet for the year, pointed out that though we lost £7 0s. 10d. on the open show, we had, through the generosity of the guarantors, a balance to the good of £6 3s. 4½d. Ro the table show, Border Fancy class was cancelled. In British, judge Mr. H. C. Smith, 1st and 2nd went to Mr. Davies. 3rd, 4th, and vhc, Mr. Morgan. Judging competition, 1st Mr. Merritt. Secretary was instructed to guarantee advt. in CAGE BIRDS for the open show. The following were elected officers for the ensuing year:—Chairman, Mr. F. S. Whetton; vice-chair, Mr. A. Maggs; sec., Mr. E. Thomas; treas., Mr. E. J. Davies; committee, Messrs. E. James, H. C. Smith, D. Raymond, W. Merrit, W. Morgan, F. Hopson, E. J. Banks, W. Sampson, F. Howard, A. J. Simons, F. Slocombe.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—6d. for the first eighteen words. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen. Name and address to be reckoned. MINIMUM, 18 words 6d.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first Eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Sixpence.

Headlines or Footlines, 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6, according to size.

ADVERTISEMENTS UNACCOMPANIED BY CORRECT REMITTANCE WILL NOT BE INSERTED.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements must in all cases bear the bona fide name and address of the advertiser, and no advertisement will be inserted if addressed to a receiving office, or similar place of call.

Small prepaid advertisements of a general nature and not connected in any way with the Cage Bird Trade are inserted at the rate of ½d. per word throughout. Minimum 12 words 6d.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the advertisement Manager. CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

REPEATING OF ADVERTISEMENTS

Advt. Manager. "Cage Birds."

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit system should be insisted upon

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which me must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expirration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

THE RED FEED

This brilliant feed is quite apart from the ordinary red peppers on the market; it may look the same, but it acts differently; it is properly mixed with hot Natal and another ingredient, which will give your birds that delightful sheen which you cannot get out of plain ordinary red peppers. Fanciers invariably ask: How do you get that wonderful colour in your birds? The secret is this ready-for-use red feed. Give it a trial on a few birds this year, and I guarantee you will have no other next. It goes further, and gives better colour. Sold in tins, 2/6, or double the quantity 4/9, post free: Judge Silk, Whitstable. (650)

"PHOSTO"

There is now no longer any reason to be troubled with bird-breeding anxieties, such as bad feeding hens, weakly youngsters out of condition, etc., as they can now be quickly and positively overcome by this remarkable food. Since this great food was brought to light a little over one year ago, it has effected the most miraculous results. Don't experiment with an untried food. Use "Phosto," which has proved itself to produce good results. Give it to your birds and note the improvement. This will again prove its value better than all the arguments. Good healthy birds mean greater success, and you will realise how very important is "Phosto." Get it at once and see the difference in your stock from early use of this excellent food; sold in 1/-, 2/6, and 4/6 tins, with directions, post free. The great bird specialist: Judge Silk, Whitstable. (631)

MEDICO

The grandest of all egg foods. We are now offering a first-class egg food at a moderate price; a good sound article that will appeal to all first-class fanciers; we guarantee it to be absolutely free from any chemicals, or colouring matter, but to contain nothing but pure egg and biscuit; there is absolutely nothing purer or better advertised. Fanciers, it is just what you are looking for; you can use it instead of fresh boiled egg, or along with it; we guarantee it to rear young birds from the nest. We want you to try it; we will refund every penny paid if this food fails to do exactly as we advertise. For birds that are run down, and for getting birds into breeding condition, this food is unequalled. A sample tin will convince you; sold in 8d. and 1/3 tins; sample tin, 4d.; all post paid; perfect satisfaction guaranteed: Frank Ditchfield, Bird Specialist, Oldham. (649)

WELHAM'S "Asthma Cure," never fails to cure colds, asthma, wheezing, etc.; "Canarydine Tonic," the grandest reviver known, sample bottles 7d. each; read "Our National Cage Birds," post free, 2½d.: Welham and Co., Coldharbour-lane, Brixton, London. (644)

EVERY birdkeeper has need of practical hints upon the prevention of diseases and their eradication from cage, aviary, and birdroom. These are to be found in "Nutshell No. 9," post free 2½d., from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

"AILING Cage Birds and How to Cure Them," "Nutshell No. 6," an account of the troubles which beset captive birds, with the treatment and list of medicines to restore our pets to health. This will save you much discouragement and money, and costs only 2½d. post free.—From "Cago Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Or 2d. from agents (list frequently published).

SOFT MOULT.

Wanted a trial. We are confident our Medicines will give you satisfaction. Special offer to all bird fanciers. If you have a cock bird that you are relying upon for the breeding season, that is not in full song, or has gone into the soft moult, or a hen that is dull and moping, and will not shape for breeding, we guarantee you a perfect cure. We have the grandest medicine ever introduced for bringing birds into breeding condition. Ditchfield's Tonic Drops are a guaranteed cure for loss of voice, soft moult, egg-binding, going light, feather-plucking, diarrhœa, and for dull and moping birds. In 7d. and 1/1 (treble size) bottles. Special size, 2/-. This medicine is undoubtedly the finest pick-me-up ever offered for birds that are run down or gone off song. Fanciers note: If our medicines fail to do as advertised, we guarantee to return full money. For bronchitis, wheesing, and hoarseness, get Ditchfield's Special Lung Tonic. Also in 7d. and 1/1 bottles. The safest and most reliable medicine ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. As an advertisement we will send a 7d. bottle of each of the above medicines for 1/-, or two 1/1 bottles for 1/9. All post paid, per return, at our risk. Two valuable seed recipes: How to Feed Linnets and Rollers for Contest Singing, given free to all purchasers of our medicines.—Frank Ditchfield, Bird Specialist, Oldham.

FRED ALLEN AND LINNET CHALLENGE

I note Allen, of Leeds, wishes to match his self-made champion against my cup winner and champion of England for £100. Very well, I accept his challenge, on condition he deposits his £100 at once. I will also sing him two more contests, one with the best break, and another time singing, 3 minutes will suit me very well. Now readers, watch for an excuse, as I am confident it is only "swank": Fred Allen, The Bird Stores, Queen's-rd., Sheffield. (644)

GOLDFINCHES! Goldfinches! Invaluable information concerning this most popular of our British birds is found in "Nutshell No. 1." (637)

FRED ALLEN, BRITISH BIRD CHAMPION

I have won more prizes and sold more winners than any three dealers put together. I am patronised by all the leading fanciers and judges, also Linnet clubs. Mr. Whisker, 3, Lancaster-place, Pontefract, near Leeds, says: "The three Linnets arrived safe. Mr. Nelson, our champion, says they are good birds. My friends are sending for some." Mr. Medley, Central Estate, Hartlepool, says: "The Linnet you sent me last year bred four nests of Light Mules. One I sold to Mr. Maddison, the judge." I have hundreds of similar testimonials. Fierce singing cock Linnets, loud voices, will sing anywhere, 2/-, 3/- each; cage, 6d. extra. I have the best strain of quality singing in England. Birds singing lovely, day and gaslight, taught under my acknowledged champion of England, cup winner, 2/6, 3/6, 4/6 each; contest cage, 1/- extra. My Book of Secrets given free for this week. I have a giant muling Linnet, a stormer, the best I have ever had, only 5/-; other gems, 2/6; cock Goldfinch, in full song, mule breeder, 6/-; cock Greenfinch and Canary, paired, 4/-; Linnet and Canary, eager to nest, 5/-; I give 7 days' approval, cash or deposit; thanking you all for patronage: Fred Allen, The British Bird Champion, 548, Queen's Road, Sheffield. (644)

HARRY ALLEN, THE ORIGINAL LINNET KING

and champion of all champions; always buy from the original. I made my name by winning prizes, not by telling the tale, and I have won more prizes than any ten dealers in the world put together, proof this paper; I am challenging the world with my Linnet, to show readers of "C.B." I am the original man. Now I have some good birds for sale this week, and some good winners amongst them; a most beautiful Red-crested Cardinal, a very large bird, perfect in feather and a real picture, like a little Bantam cock, 10/6; Cockatiels, one cock and hen, paired, and an odd hen, all in beautiful plumage and in breeding condition, 12/6 the lot, bargain; Linnets, taught by the champion Linnet of the world, a treat to hear, with nice soft mellow voices and beautiful quality notes, with new cage, and my book of secrets, 3/6, 4/6, and 5/6; a few schoolmasters, right for teaching Mules, 8/6, 10/6, and 15/-; now these are the real goods, and I defy any dealer to supply the same for the money. Very large muling Linnets, guaranteed to mule, 2/6, 3/6, and 5/-. I hold the world's record for mulers. Linnets from the same place as the champion of the world, 2/- each; try one of these Larks, singing daylight and gaslight, with full voice, 2/-, 3/-; a few hand-reared ones, singing, with quality notes, indoors or out, a treat to hear, 4/6 and 5/6; cages, 1/- each; muling pairs, Goldfinch and Bullfinch, 8/6; Goldfinch and hen Canary, paired up, 17/6; Linnet and hen Canary, paired up, 5/-; very large cock Greenfinch and hen Bullfinch, paired up, 6/-; Bramblefinches and Chaffinches, 1/- each; they are all beautiful birds. I can supply any quantity to parks or aviaries, British or Foreign; correspondence, a pleasure, so send to your old friend, Harry Allen, Bird Specialist and Judge, City Aviaries, 40, Beckett-st., Leeds. (654)

CANARY breeding for beginners, 7d., by Claude St. John. A practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

DO you know just what benefit you are deriving from your hobby? It is necessary to keep some account, and it may be kept in the most compact and handy form if you use, "The Stock Book, and Breeding-room Register," compiled by G. E. Weston; this makes bird-breeding easy. In addition to all that is required to enable the breeder to see at a glance how he stands, there are many hints for times of emergency. Price 7d., post free, from: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

FOREIGN birds for beginners, 1/1½, by W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign birds. Replete with useful hints: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

BUDGERIGARS and Cockatiels are among the most popular foreign birds, and C. P. Arthur has had a lifetime's experience with them. His book, "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," will show you how to keep them, feed them for health, how to breed them, and how to teach them to talk. The price of this valuable handbook is only 6½d., post free, from: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown, Pekin Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage, have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutshell No. 19," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Get it at once. 2½d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

In the world of business to-day, it is a continual pitting of one man's brains against another's. Mental alertness is an important factor to success, and the rational way to retain it is by cycling, but see that your choice falls on a reliable, easy-running, "last-for-ever" machine, qualities that are inseparably associated with the high-grade Coventry cycles, which are a speciality of the well-known, easy-payment house of Messrs. Edward O'Brien, Ltd., the World's largest cycle dealers, Coventry. So extensive is the business of Messrs. O'Brien, Ltd., and so wide is the range of excellent machines they offer their customers, that all one needs to know about the machine is that Messrs. O'Brien, Ltd., supplied it. That, in itself, is a guarantee that the cycle will be an ideal mount. Cycles are no longer a luxury of the wealthy. they are placed within the reach of practically all. A reliable and serviceable machine can be purchased from Messrs. O'Brien for £3 10s. One of the slogans of this enterprising firm is "Best Quality, Finest-Grade, Coventry Cycles at Pounds below the maker's prices." It would be a good plan to write for their latest 1913 catalogues.

A Montagu's Harrier has been known to hover over the nest at a height of about fifty feet, and drop a mouse down to its mate, who promptly caught it.

Bullfinches in Spring.

Bullfinches pair for life and can be seen together all the year round. Just now their soft plaintive piping notes can be heard along the tall hedgerows, where they will probably construct their future home of roots, moss, and hair. They are fond of the thicket, and are seldom seen in the open fields, excepting during very bad weather. Their food in the spring consists principally of buds, particularly those of the fruit trees, the currant is their favourite of all.

SHOW DATES FIXED.

To secure insertion in this column, a guarantee that the show will be advertised in "C.B." to the extent of at least 25/- must be sent to our manager. Please note that we only insert those that guarantee, so our list is a bona-fide one.

NOTES BY THE SECRETARY.

The R.S.P.C.A. and Bird-keeping.

Members of Cage Birds League, and readers generally, will note that no further letter has been received from Mr. Fairholme, chief secretary of the Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. As is pointed out in several of the letters published this week, the present question at issue is whether Mr. Trower, in his letter published on March 8, was correct in stating that "the R.S.P.C.A. exists by getting convictions. . . They very seldom caution," and so on. This statement was traversed by the Countess von Hahn in a letter published in Cage Birds of March 15, in which the Countess stigmatised Mr. Trower's statement as being "most unfair and misleading." The Countess quoted figures to the effect that, in 1911, 25.540 cautions were given, and 7,038 convictions obtained. This was supported by Mr. Fairholme, who gave us last week the figures for 1912, 25,659 cautions, as against 6,906 convictions. The figures quoted by the Countess von Hahn and Mr. Fairholme refer, of course, to the total work of the R.S.P.C.A. throughout the two years, and not to convictions and cautions in respect of cruelty to birds, with which alone we are concerned. I was able to show last week that of the 6,906 convictions obtained during 1912, 29 only were in any way traceable to bird dealing, bird catching or bird keeping, and that some at least of these must have been for bird-nesting and such like "offences during the close season, etc.," including cases of such a nature as the one reported in our columns this week under the heading "In the Courts"; cases which have nothing whatever to do with bird-keeping.

The Question Direct.

What we are seeking now to know is, how many of the 51,999 cautions given during the years 1911 and 1912 were in respect of cruelty or alleged cruelty to birds. It should be a simple matter for the secretary of the R.S.P.C.A. to answer this question, and it is due to his society that he should do this in support of the statement of the Countess von Hahn and himself that the society is primarily a cautionary one, and only prosecutes "in cases that are so bad as to necessitate such a course."

Our contention is that both the R.S.P.C.A. and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds are guilty of gross exaggeration in their allegations as to the horrors incidental to bird keeping, and unless Mr. Fairholme can tell us that a fair proportion of the 52,000 cautions were given to people who were guilty of "systematic neglect of birds in cages," or of some other offence against wild birds, we shall be justified in concluding that the R.S.P.C.A. is not a cautionary society where our hobby is concerned, but that, on the contrary, it endeavours by means that are not beyond magisterial condemnation to obtain convictions against bird-dealers upon the unsupported testimony of its own inspectors, who know little or nothing of birds, and who confess the same under examination in the police courts.

Where Good may be Done.

I have pointed out on more than one occasion that even if every bird taken by the bird-catcher were to perish in captivity the destruction of bird life entailed would be almost as nothing to that which is effected every spring by bird-nesting schoolboys and hooligans who seem to take eggs and young for sheer love of mischief. An educative article on "The Wanton Destruction of Early Nests and Eggs," which appeared in the London "Daily Graphic" of the 12th inst. contains the following passage which expresses exactly the views that have several times been given in these columns, and I commend the same to the notice of local authorities, as well as to the humanitarian societies who profess to have at heart the protection of the wild birds of our country.

The Ground Strewn with Egg-Shells.

"The amount of wilful destruction of early nests and eggs by the marauding schoolboys is incalculable, and it is almost a county scandal that so little is done by the authorities, who are elected to govern our local life, to prevent it. When the County Councils have sent out their printed lists of protected birds, and have caused these lists to be affixed to church doors, barns, and other makeshift notice-boards, they seem to think that respect for their orders is thereby instilled into the mind of every village boy. Thereafter nothing is done, and the gangs of lads, who by now should have had some elementary ideas of humanity instilled into them, roam along the hedges tearing down every nest within arm's reach or climbing distance, and stoning those that are beyond them. And the ground is strewn with eggshells and nesting materials to mark the places they have visited. The lists of protected birds are left to flap in the wind, and long before the nesting season is in full swing they are obliterated by April showers. This orgy of destruction reaches its height on Sundays, when, on leaving Sunday School the boys set out to visit the remoter places, trespassing without let or hindrance, and spoiling innumerable nests. One or two prosecutions in each district would soon stop the nuisance. Once let the boys know that the village constable is on the look-out, and that he means business, and they would fancy 'each bush an officer,' and think twice before despoiling a copse of its nests and eggs."

Here is a wide field for the expenditure of some of the energy which is wasted in efforts to bring about the making illegal the keeping of any kind of bird in captivity. A walk along almost any country lane, or even along the semi-rural roads adjacent to our cities, will at any time during the spring reveal opportunities of preventing this wicked destruction of eggs and helpless young birds.

TERMS OF MEMBERSHIP.

Henry J. Fulljames,
Secretary Cage Birds League,
154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

How to become an Associate.

Many readers of Cage Birds have written to say that they would like to join Cage Birds' League, but cannot afford the subscription. To meet their wishes we have decided to form, in connection with the League, a body of Associates. All we ask of these Associates is that they will promise to give every possible attention to the wants of their birds. And they must induce others to see that their birds are kept happy and contented.

All that the intending Associate has to do is to sign the coupon herewith, get five of his or her friends to sign each a similar coupon, and send the six, together with a penny stamp, to the Secretary of Cage Birds League, who will forward by return an enamelled Button Badge of the League. There will be no other charge. NOW, THEN, BIRD LOVERS!—USE YOUR BEST EFFORTS IN THIS SPLENDID CAUSE.

THE BIRD LOVER'S PLEDGE.

I hereby promise to take every care of my feathered pets and to induce others to do the same

The Gateshead Appeal

We have a few further sums to acknowledge this week, but hope to find our fund considerably augmented in the near future, as quite a considerable amount of money is still needed before the Society's indebtedness can be wiped out. It will be remembered that this fund was instituted with a view to helping the Gateshead C.B.S. to discharge the heavy financial liabilities incurred by reason of the failure of their last annual show (due to the railway strike) and the prosecution of the secretary by the police authorities for getting up a prize-drawing with the idea of providing funds. Full details of these matters were given in our issues of dates March 29 and April 5. We shall be glad to acknowledge any sums, however small, which readers and societies care to contribute.

Cage Birds' subscription list at time of going to press stands as follows: Amount previously acknowledged £6 2s. 6d.; Kelty and Blairadam C.B.S., 5s.; Mr. D. Storrar, 1s. 4d.; Mr. A. E. Long (Longsight), 1s. 6d.; Stanley Victoria Club F. and F.S., 5s.; total £6 15s. 4d. To this must be added the amount (vide Mr. Curry's letter) resulting from Mr. Goodman's offer, 18s. 9d.; while Mr. Greason's list amounts to £2 5s. 10d., bringing the grand total to £9 19s. 11d.

What Others Think.

In sending a contribution of 5s. from his society, the Kelty and Blairadam C.B.S., Mr. A. Dickson writes: "We hope that the richer societies will give at least double this, and the poorer societies at least half. We have decided to pass the hat round at our next meeting, and every member will have a postcard to that effect."

Mr. David Storrar (Dundee) sends 2s., when writing for a copy of Cage Birds 1913 Annual, and writes: "The balance of 1s. 4d. you can add to the Gateshead fund. I feel sorry for them in their trouble."

Secretary R. Peart, when forwarding the Stanley Victoria Club F. and F.S. contribution, writes:—"We hope the Gateshead Society will soon be all right, as it would be a big loss to the North if this grand show happened to fall through."

A Correction.

We are sorry that through an unnoticed mistake on the part of our printers, the principal point of Mr. Hammond's letter published in our issue of last week was lost. In pointing out the error Mr. Hammond writes: "It is well at this time that the Bradford men, and others, should be reminded how generously Gateshead met us in the matter of arranging dates." The sentence which was wrongly printed should have read as follows:—"Apart altogether from the magnanimous manner in which the committee and members of the Gateshead society met our own national show committee in the matter of so arranging dates that these two great events should not clash with each other, such an exhibition as that which our Gateshead friends provide is of so vast an importance to the Fancy that any fancier worthy of the name should not contemplate even its possible discontinuance without feelings of dismay."

From Past and Present Secretaries.

Sir,—I wish to personally thank Cage Birds for its kindness in dealing with our troubles, also for the generous manner in which you have opened and headed the subscription list, which will enable me to hand over a clean sheet to Mr. Curry to start his new duties. The following is a list of the subscriptions that have been handed to me since the fund opened:—Hartlepool C.B.S., 9s. 10d.; Mr. Crawhall (Newcastle), 5s.; Mr. Topping (Newcastle), 5s.; Mr. T. Chapman (Newcastle), 2s. 6d.; Mr. Boag (Gateshead), 2s.; Mr. Maddison's bird, sold 6s.; Mr. Almond's birds, sold 5s.; Mr. Almond's leg of mutton, sold 3s.; Mr. Mackenzie's cage, sold 5s.; Mr. Moore's cage, sold 2s. 6d. The latter five items were prizes intended for the prize drawing, and which have since been sold. Total, £2 5s. 10d.

J. G. Greason, late Sec.

Sir,—Re Mr. Goodman's kind offer, I set to work at once to try and get some orders for his "Filup" Young Bird Feeders, and I am glad to inform you that I have been successful in getting 15, so please include the amount in the most generous subscription list which you opened in Cage Birds on our behalf. The total I have received is 18s. 9d. I expect by next week to increase the amount. At the same time I am trying to do Mr. Goodman a bit of good in return for his kind offer, by getting him orders from those who are not members of the Gateshead Society. I will also be pleased if you will let it be known that all future correspondence should be addressed to me, as I have been elected secretary in place of Mr. Greason, who has resigned through business reasons.

W. Curry.

CANTERBURY SHOW, DEC. 10th and 11th
Please do not Clash.

A WONDERFUL DISPLAY OF AUSTRALIAN BIRDS.

Remarkable Opportunity comes the way of Lovers of these Feathered Beauties.

One of the most wonderful sights ever seen in a bird-dealer's shop is to be witnessed this week at the well-known establishment of Messrs. De Von and Co. (114, Bethnal Green Road, Shoreditch, London). This firm has built up by its enterprise and straight-dealing a great reputation and a great business as importers of rare foreign birds. Their latest feat is the importation of a huge collection of beautiful species from Australia—a feat rendered the more noteworthy by reason of the fact that the Australian Government had forbidden the exportation of native birds.

When the law was passed Mr. Wallace, the well-known trapper, was camping with his Bushmen helpers in the north of the island. Almost a year later he appeared at the port of Fremantle with over 7,000 birds for transportation to London. An exchange of cablegrams ensued, and after a delay of three months the trapper was given special permission to set sail with his multitudinous charges on condition that that was the last consignment.

So English bird-lovers have a great opportunity to-day—an opportunity that is unlikely to recur. It is needless for us to dwell upon the loveliness of the Gouldian Finches, both Blacks and Reds, the Crimson, Ruficauda, Bicheno, and Zebra Finches, and all the other gems that Messrs. De Von and Co. are offering for sale; their beauties are known to practically all. Our duty is to make sure that none of our readers shall fail to realise the chance that lies before them. It is unlikely that the opportunity of purchasing the desirable species above mentioned at the present low prices will offer itself again for many, many years. It is a chance which those who have aviaries should be particularly eager to seize, as Gouldian, etc., Finches are not very difficult to breed, and the young always command a remunerative price and a ready sale. Now is the time to stock pairs for breeding purposes, and establish a home-bred strain.

The birds are on the whole in wonderfully fine condition—we have never known so huge a consignment land in such splendid trim—which speaks volumes for the care bestowed upon them on their long journey. A reference to the advertisement columns (page 335) will give readers full particulars of Messrs. De Von's stock and the prices.

Mr. C. A. House has been elected to judge the cage bird section at Pontypridd show, Nov. 26.

We hear that Mr. J. W. Metcalfe (Liverpool) is judging Crewe nest feather show, June 14, and at Chester, July 9.

In my report, Yorks County B.B. and M.C., writes Mr. J. Lane, hon. sec., I omitted number of shows 11, and number of entries, about 200.

Will you please announce in Cage Birds, writes Mr. A. W. Bacon, hon. sec. Redhill C.B.S., that Mr. J. Robson will judge our young bird show on July 2.

We hear from Mr. W. H. Gibb, hon. sec. that the fourth open annual show of the Brighton and Hove C.B.A., will be held Dec. 9 and 10, Messrs. H. Norman and J. Robson being the judges.

Mr. W. L. Smith, S. Shields C.B.S., writes as follows:—"Kindly withdraw our advert from your fixed date column. On account of the difficulty of fixing a convenient date, we have agreed to hold a members' show instead."

Kindly announce to the members and those interested in the Chester-le-Street C.B.S., writes Mr. R. Ward, sec., that we have removed our headquarters, and all future meetings, etc., will be held at Mr. J. Waugh's, Dun Cow Inn.

Wandsworth F.S., writes Mr. Lightfoot, hon. sec., has arranged to hold its open show on Dec. 10 and 11. Next meeting will be held at "Sutton's Hall," April 24th, at 8.—W. Lightfoot, hon. sec., 86, Heythorp St., Southfields, S.W.

Secretary R. Lile, Scottish Metropolitan open Derby, 15, Argyll Place, Edinburgh, writes that membership cards have now been issued. Anyone overlooked should communicate with Mr. Lile, who will be very pleased to forward cards.

Kindly inform the Fancy through the columns of your esteemed paper, writes Mr. J. G. Greason, that Mr. W. Curry, 60, Grosvenor Gardens, Newcastle, has now taken over the duties of secretary of the Gateshead Society.

We have engaged the undernoted well-known men to judge at our Jubilee show, Nov. 1, writes Mr. G. Mitchell, sec. Brechin C.B.S.: Norwich, Mr. J. Logan, Dysart; Borders, Mr. G. Hislop, Stirling; British, Mr. G. Finnie, Aberdeen.

The Wallasey and Dist. C.B.S., writes Mr. W. Hodgkins, hon. sec., have decided to have a ramble on Saturday, 26th inst. Meet at headquarters (Fairhaven Institute, Sea View Rd., Liscard), at 3 p.m. prompt. All fanciers cordially invited.

At a meeting held at the Railway Hotel, Llandilo on April 10, it was decided, writes Mr. H. S. Davies, hon. sec. Llandilo C.B., etc., S., to hold a cage-bird, etc., show here during the autumn, Rev. E. Lewis-Jones chairman. Further particulars will be sent later on as to date, etc.

Would you kindly announce through your valuable paper, writes Mr. D. Kerr, hon. sec. Forfar C.B.S., that we have secured Mr. Thos. Morrison, Hamilton (Norwich); Mr. James Hamilton, Eskbank (Border); and Mr. Robt. Watson, Glasgow (Foreign and Wild Birds) to act as judges at our forthcoming show.

The judges at the show of the Kelty and Blairadam C.B.S. show on Nov. 8th are Messrs. F. Ramsay, Tayport, Scotch Fancy; W. McAdam, Lasswade, Borders; J. McLennan, Renfrew, Yorks; W. Reid, Falkland, Crests; A. Chalmers, Kirkintilloch, Norwich; C. Sykes, Musselburgh, Mules, Brit., and Foreign.

To Society Secretaries, Advertisers and Correspondents generally.

Will all correspondents, and secretaries and officials of societies in particular, please note that CAGE BIRDS now goes to press on Wednesday afternoon so that all matter for publication in our issue of the same week MUST reach us on TUESDAY TO BE CERTAIN OF INCLUSION, or first post Wednesday at latest.

It would much facilitate our work if Secretaries and others would kindly write out their club reports, notices, etc., in the style in which they see them printed. Write on ONE SIDE ONLY of each sheet of paper used.

We hear from Mr. A. Wake, hon. sec. Middlesbrough Tees-Side C.B.S., that Mr. T. Bennett, Bradford, and Mr. A. Brown, Gateshead, will judge the Canary section, and Mr. J. Maddison, Newcastle, the British and Mules at the open show of the society to be held Oct. 25, 1913.

Please announce in your valuable paper that Mr. F. Robinson has resigned the secretaryship of the Newtownards and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. Wm. Montgomery, 165, Mill St., Newtownards, and that I have been appointed in his place. All communications for above society to be addressed to me.

The stock of the late Mr. S. Williamson, a very old fancier and judge, of Nantwich, who passed away a fortnight since, is being advertised this week. He had been in the Fancy for sixty years, writes Mr. A. Windsor, and some of your older readers will know him well. At our Nantwich show he carried away practically all the honours several times.

We have received the Manual of the Leyton and Dist. C.B.A. for 1913. It contains a list of the officers and committees, syllabus of lectures, etc., and dates of shows for the year, the rules of the society, show regulations and particulars of cups and specials, and a list of members and their addresses. The hon. secs. are Messrs. Forse and Son, 31, Thornhill Rd., Leyton.

and let us dispose of your surplus stock, etc.

Mr. Wesley T. Page writes as follows:—"Very many thanks for your kind and sympathetic reference to our sudden and painful bereavement. Kindly allow me and the other members of the family sincerely to thank, through Cage Birds, those from far and near who have sent kind letters of condolence, too numerous to acknowledge individually. Will one and all kindly accept our thanks and appreciation."

In sending us a balance-sheet of the Woolwich Fanciers' Society, Mr. Pavey writes:—"There are still a few pots and pans for the cage-bird section; all we require is a few more cage-bird members to take part in the speaking and the competition at the meetings and shows. Subscription 2s. 6d., with 1s. entrance. Apply for membership to show secretary, Mr. G. Boyce, 68, Elm St., Plumstead." We are pleased to note that the society has a cash balance of well over £13, and a balance of assets of over £22.

Samples have reached us of the exceptionally good and well-made marking rings manufactured and sold by Mr. A. C. Hughes, Hampton Hill, Middlesex. In addition to aluminium rings, both closed and to open, of quite ideal form, Mr. Hughes has a celluloid ring (to open) in twelve different colours, which is as light as a snowflake, and can be put on by anyone with absolutely no trouble or risk, by using the special tool sent out with them. The numbers cannot wear or rub off, and the price is extremely moderate (six dozen can be bought for 2s. 6d.).

Mr. Jas. Bray, 67, St. Dunstan's Rd., Hammersmith, W., writes as follows:—"I desire to take this opportunity of informing you that I have been elected hon. sec. of the London C.B.A., and to ask your kind assistance in making this, the twenty-fifth year, one of the best in the history of the Association. I also beg to inform you that the meeting place has been changed to "El Nino," No. 3, Piccadilly Place (near Dover Street Station on the Piccadilly Tube) and the meeting night to the second Tuesday in each month. I hope that members will take advantage of this new arrangement, and turn up in large numbers."

Cage Birds Annual I have always had since first published. I find it very handy to refer to, and it is not only useful for beginners, but also for fanciers who have long passed the callow stage. For instance, our memories cannot always recall the remedies required in cases of emergency which crop up in the breeding room. So I advise all fanciers to procure a copy of Cage Birds 1913 Annual and study it; they will find it very helpful to them with their hobby.—W. McClure (Mount Florida, Glasgow).

The opening article in the April issue of the Avicultural Magazine, the organ of the Avicultural Society, is by Mr. H. D. Astley, on the Gardener Bower Bird. Miss E. F. Chawner writes an entertaining chapter: "In Praise of Owls," illustrated by photographs, and by a sketch of the Pigmy Owl, by Mr. Astley. "Some Experiences," by Mr. A. Lockyer, is a well told account of some happenings with the writer's birds. Sir Roland Corbet contributes a chapter on Crested Tits and other Birds, and the rest of the issue comprises Reviews and Correspondence as usual.

Societies desiring the patronage of the specialist clubs at their 1913 shows should apply as follows: National Green Marked Y.C.C., Mr. E. Clegg, Victoria School House, Dewsbury; Norwich Plainhead Club, Mr. F. Cunliffe, 19, Lark St., Burnley; National British Bird and Mule Club, Mr. J. P. Carr, 45, Overdale Rd., S. Ealing, W.; Southern Norwich P.C., Mr. F. S. Matthes, 34, Rotherhithe New Rd., S.E.; Northern Yorks C.C., Mr. R. Tindale, 141, Stanton St., Newcastle-on-Tyne; Cinnamon Marked Y.C.C. Mr. R. Garnett, 8, Leeds Rd., Windhill, Shipley.

A Rung Starling.

I have a Starling which has a ring on its leg marked Witherby, London, No. 16797, writes Mr. W. Furnell (Grimsby).

Brighton and Hove C.B.A. Rules.

Several members having overlooked Rule 4, writes Mr. W. H. Gibb, hon. sec., the committee have decided to extend the date till the half-yearly meeting on June 11.

In the Heart of China.

When done with, my copy of Cage Birds goes out East, to Hong Kong, and from there to two Baptist missionaries (old school-chums of mine) living in the heart of China, but some hundreds of miles from each other.—A. E. Morris (Fishguard).

War on the Birds.

The Sparrows, Thrushes, and Pigeons have done so much damage to the flowers and trees in the public gardens and parks of Paris that the gardeners have received instructions to reduce their number by destroying the eggs during the approaching nesting season.

Birds Hatched in a Top-boot.

Thrushes on the Lilford estate, Northamptonshire—a famous bird sanctuary—built their nest in a top-boot in a railway hovel between Barnwell and Wigsthorpe. Three young Thrushes were hatched and reared, although platelayers use the hovel at mealtimes.

Silver Cup and Gold Medal for Leeds.

Will you kindly mention, for the benefit of Leeds fanciers, writes Mr. W. A. Wilson, hon. sec. Leeds C.B.S., 39, Burley Rd., that Mr. E. Hattersley has presented a silver cup to be won outright this year, also a gold medal for foreign section, and I should be delighted to hear from any intending members. Wishing Cage Birds every success.

A Good Worker Lost.

The new sec. of the Wallsend and Mid-Tyne C.B.S., Mr. M. Wigglesworth, 9, Fourth Avenue, Heaton, Newcastle, writes: "Please announce in your valuable paper that Mr. Macdonald has resigned the secretaryship, and that I have been appointed in his place. We shall all miss him from the place that he has filled so well in the past; a good worker for the club, and willing to give a helping hand to his fellow fanciers; we trust that he will still remain a member amongst us. A vote of thanks was passed by the members for the services he had rendered for the club.

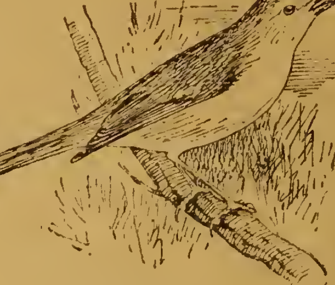
Perils of the Migrants.

The contrivance invented by the Dutch naturalist, Professor J. P. Thijsse to prevent the enormous destruction of migratory birds at lighthouses, is to be erected and tested at two English lighthouses—St. Catherine's on the coast of the Isle of Wight and the Caskets in the English Channel. Both of these are on the main migration lines, and account for the loss of great numbers of migrants. Professor Thijsse's view is that the birds are not stunned or killed by the impact with the lantern, but are only attracted to the light, and keep circling about it till they perish. He accordingly devised a series of resting-places to be fitted on the lantern itself, and experiments with these at Terschelling reduced the mortality from thousands nightly to a hundred during the whole migration time. Several countries have made inquiries about the invention.

Wild-Bird Life.

The First Migrants.

Although a few of the spring migrants have put in an appearance, the cold winds have undoubtedly kept many of them back. The change to more congenial conditions is bound to come, and when it does we shall have a rush of birds to our woods and hedgerows. Although many migrants nest directly upon arrival, the season is so far advanced that clutches of eggs and young birds will be later than usual. In the district where the writer resides, which is situated upon the higher ground, in Surrey, the Wheatear is always the first of the spring visitors to put in an appearance. He loves the uplands, the wide stretches of common land, and the sloping fields upon the hillsides. So conspicuous is the Wheatear that he is noticed directly upon arrival, his general colouring often harmonises with his surroundings, but that conspicuous white patch of feathers at the root of the tail is sure to attract attention as he flits from clod to clod, turning to face the intruder at each stopping place.



THE CHIFF-CHAFF.

To find the Chiff-chaff we must forsake the open fields, and the breezy upland; he is a slender, dainty little fellow, and at all times likes a sheltered nook. He is an early visitor to the Chipstead Valley, a wooded dell with sloping hills upon either side. This is a lovely spot, and the home of many a rare migrant, but we need not travel so far to see our first Chiff-chaff. A sheltered copse facing the south, just outside the village, always contains one or two early birds. Taking the footpath running along the lower side, we were not long before we heard the clear notes of this little wanderer, uttered four or five times in quick succession, but it was some time before we were fortunate enough to get a sight of him. At last he was detected working from bough to bough, hunting and peering into every likely and unlikely place for insects. Sometimes he would dart into the air like a Flycatcher for some passing gnat (many of which had been brought out by a gleam of sunshine). At intervals he sang without the slightest pause in his occupation, quite as a matter of course, and quite unconcernedly. From the trees he made a journey to the edge of the wood, where a heap of refuse had been thrown; here insects appeared to be plentiful, and these he shared with a couple of common Wrens, who frequently dived out of sight to search the more secluded nooks. Upon arriving home we found another Chiff-chaff, in the garden, busy among the roses and fruit trees.

We have received the Hand Book of the Leeds C.B.S. for 1913. It is a neatly got up booklet, and contains a mass of information in connection with the society. Particulars of membership are given, a list of patrons, officers, and committee, syllabus for the year, conditions appertaining to the challenge cups, medals, etc., a list of specials for the various shows of the year, the full classification at each of the shows and the names of the judges, and a list of members' names and addresses. The hon. sec. is Mr. W. A. Wilson, 39, Burley Rd., Leeds.

Robin Killed by Express Train.

In a Grave.

During the absence of the grave diggers for a couple of hours a pair of Robins practically completed the building of a nest in the side of a newly dug grave in Narborough (Norfolk) Churchyard.

Credit for the Breeder.

It was an agreeable surprise to see my foul Yellow Yorkshire hen illustrated. She has had a good many admirers, and all say it reflects great credit on Mr. Norman for drawing so true a likeness of her. Without a doubt she has been the hen of the year in the Green Fancy I believe in giving credit where it is due, so I am pleased to inform your readers that Mr. Huddleston, of Manningham, bred her. May he live long in the Fancy to breed more like her.—J. W. Metcalfe (Liverpool).

THE MASTER SINGER OF THE CANARY TRIBE

By
J. TOMLINSON
(Newcastle, Staffs).

How to keep the Roller Canary in health, to breed for pleasure and profit, and train for exhibition.

AT some period in our existence, most of us will have read, or heard, of a quotation that has impressed itself vividly upon our memories. On a recent visit to London, I had wandered aimlessly about, until I found myself inside the enclosure in Leicester Square. By accident I took a seat facing the statue of Shakespeare. I was admiring what I considered to be a fine specimen of the sculptor's art, when my attention was arrested by the first finger on the right hand pointing to the quotation: "There is no darkness like ignorance." I thought how fittingly this phrase could be used in connection with our hobby. I meditated upon the hundreds of people I had passed that morning, and what a small percentage of them there would be who would not stop to praise the music of the Song Thrush, perched on the topmost branch of a tree; the song of a Linnet, or the flute-like notes of the Black-bird. I thought, too, how few of these hundreds of people had ever heard, or even knew of the beautiful melody by which a high-class Roller Canary can hold its audience spell-bound until the conclusion of its delivery.

Into Our Hearts and Homes.

The experienced will not accuse me of being too eulogistic when I claim for the Roller Canary the title of "The master singer of the Canary tribe." Neither will it be stretching the truth to say that by sheer merit it is actually singing itself into our hearts and homes. This is exemplified by the ejaculations that come from any person of average temperament when first hearing the song of a high-class specimen. It is significant that with the passing of each year we find the number of Roller fanciers, also Roller societies, augmented.

It may be rather astonishing to find that there are still a few people tenaciously retaining the erroneous idea that the Roller Canary will only sing for one year. It is deplorable that this rumour should be so constantly reiterated, and it should be the duty of every fancier to repudiate it. Personally, I say emphatically that there is not one iota of truth in it. If the Roller is given ordinary care and attention, it will sing and be as long lived as any other variety of Canary; further, it is not an uncommon occurrence for highly bred exhibition specimens to retain their song to such perfection that they are not only eligible to compete for, but actually win prizes on the show bench in their second and sometimes their third year.

"What's in a Name?

There have been so many different names used to describe the German Roller Canary that the inexperienced are often hopelessly confused in their choice when contemplating a purchase. By whatever name they may be called, however, they all come under the category of the Hartz Mountain Canary, the St. Andreasburg Canary, or the Twite, Seifert, Glucke, or Water Glucke strains.

In my humble endeavours to afford guidance for the new beginner in the Roller Canary fancy, I have endeavoured not to be laconic, but to describe in detail the various methods employed, so as to enable the recruit to purchase his birds, to keep them in health as pets, or to breed for pleasure and profit, also to explain the modus operandi of training for exhibition.

As the title "German" Roller implies, this variety of Canary is the national breed of the German people, and it is to Germany that we are indebted for this fascinating songster. Our thanks are also due to those who have added to our knowledge by translating articles from the German press for use in our English fancy press; further, to these English fanciers who have given us the benefit of their experiences in their own breeding rooms. A fancier friend of mine once said to me "Literature on the Roller Canary written by Englishmen is so rare." A mistake made by our English Roller fanciers is that they are so apt to think everyone knows the same things that they do. It should not be forgotten that beginners are continually joining the Fancy, to whom even the phrase "A bad feeding hen" would be quite unintelligible; and it is this class of fancier in particular that I intend to endeavour to guide, so that they will be able to keep their pets in health, to be to them a source of pleasure and profit.

A Successful Breeder and Exhibitor of the Yorkshire Canary.

Mr. William Hulme, of Leigh, Lancs., who in 1912 won the Leigh and Dist. C.B.S. cup and locket for most points scored at two shows with 4 nominated birds, the medal on the right for 3rd best bird at the old bird show, and that on the left for most points at the pair show.

The beginner will read in CAGE BIRDS many different names (or "strains") which are given to the German Canary; such as the Hartz Mountain Roller, the St. Andreasburg Roller, the Hollow Roll, the Seifert (it may not be out of place if I mention here that the Hollow Roll strain and the Seifert strain represent one and the same bird), the Water Glucke, and the Glucke strains. The Hartz Mountain Roller is the commonest and the cheapest variety; it is the foundation from which our present strains have been built.

Where Huge Numbers Are Bred.

The Roller is bred in huge numbers in Germany, and after being graded into classes, according to the merits (singing abilities) of the birds, the inferior are classed as Hartz Mountain Rollers, while the better performers gain the name of St. Andreasburg Roller, so it will easily be seen that, as a rule, these names are given to distinguish the inferior from the better-class songsters out of the common German country Canary. The name St. Andreasburg probably arises from the fact that at one time the best singers of all the German Canaries came from the place named St. Andreasburg.

The true Seifert strain has a more classical song, and a different style of song, to the above mentioned. This strain is noted for its beautiful rendering of the Hollow Roll and Hollow Bell tours. It is doubtful whether the Seifert of to-day is the true descendant of the strain of that noted fancier, Herr Siefert, because we read that he would not sell a pair (cock or hen) to any fancier; but let us be just and give him every credit for the grand singer that he established.

Our fanciers are now complaining that the beautiful deep Hollow Roll tour is slipping away from us in our endeavours to cultivate the Glucke tour. It was about the time of the formation of the British Roller Canary Club that the Hollow Roll strain began to find favour with English fanciers, in preference to the strain of Trute, whose birds, while possessing a greater variety of tours, had some objectionable faults in their repertoire. At that time it was quite a common occurrence to see a bird with a crest.

The Longing for Variety.

It has been advanced that Seifert founded his strain upon the Trute birds, and in his endeavour to establish a bird with a pure song some of the good tours were allowed to drop out along with the faults. Whether its popularity with us was due to the novelty of possessing a bird singing a song without any faults is hard to say, but in a few years time we began to complain that there was not sufficient variety in this bird's song, and that it was getting monotonous. To combat this, other tours were introduced, i.e., the Water Tours, and these singers were known by the name of the Water Glucke strain. In addition to the tours sung by the Seifert birds—which are the Hollow Roll tour, Hollow Bell tour, Schockel tour (pronounced Shockel). Flute notes, Bell tour, Bass Roll, and the Bell Roll, the Water Glucke strain would sing the Water Roll, Water Glucke, and the Deep Bubbling Water tour. The next fashionable tour was the Glucke. With the introduction of this and the Water Glucke, came back faults which Seifert had endeavoured to eradicate; further. the Hollow Roll has been allowed to deteriorate, as it was a common occurrence for the Seifert strain to receive seven and eight points (this being the maximum number allowed by our English judging standard) for the Hollow Roll.

WAYSIDE SEEDS AND BERRIES FOR BRITISH BIRDS.

By that well-known authority. JAS. B. CLARKE, (Rothesay).

A continuation from No. 586 of a remarkable article on wild-foods, the result of a lifetime's experience of Birds in field and aviary.

COMMON YARROW OR MILFOIL (Achillea millefolium).—A common plant, known to most. Grows about 12 inches high with woolly stems and white or pink flowers. A favourite seed of the Linnet, Twite, and Redpoll, and good for them during the winter. This seed being of a binding nature, other laxative seeds should be given with it.

SEASIDE PLANTAIN (Plantago maritima).—Common along the sea shores. Grows about six inches high, and resembles Plantago major, but the flowering heads are much smaller. A grand seed for Linnets, Twites, and Redpolls, and fanciers who can get it should see they give these birds a good supply when moulting.

A Grand Thing for Bullfinches.

LING OR HEATHER (Calluna vulgaris).—A great favourite of the Bullfinch; in fact, it is the principal food of the Bullfinch in Bute from August to March, when they then take to the larch trees. I find Bullfinches caught when feeding on heather are very difficult to wean on to hard seeds. It is a good plan to cut bunches of heather, and dip them in water, and then into the seed dish. The seeds stick to the heather, and by this means I have saved many a bird. It is also a good plan to try fresh-caught Bullfinches with water after you have had them a few hours. Catch the bird and dip its bill in water; you will save many a one by so doing. Cut in bunches for winter, also for summer use—heather will last for 12 months if kept in a dry place.

COMMON FURZE OR WHINS (Ulex europæus).—Common everywhere, and a handsome plant, with its bright yellow flowers. The seed is useful for Hawfinches in confinement. Flowers in February and June, and again in August and September. Gather the seed pods when ripe and store in a dry place.

COMMON BIRCH (Betula alba).—A handsome tree, the seeds of which are readily eaten by Siskins, Redpolls, and Bullfinches, and most useful for these birds in cages. For winter use, cut in bunches and store in a dry place.

COMMON BRAMBLE (Rubus fruticosus).—A common plant, with white flowers and jet-black fruit—a favourite fruit of Blackbirds, Thrushes, Waxwings, and Bullfinches. I find these berries extremely useful, and they help greatly to bring out the rich crimson breast of the Bullfinch. To keep for winter use, they should be preserved.

HORNBEAM (Carpinus betulus).—A handsome tree with downy leaves and rich scarlet berries, the latter most useful for Blackbirds, Waxwings, Thrushes, and Hawfinches—a grand fruit when they are moulting, and for winter use. To preserve them, cut when almost ripe, and pack away in sawdust; must be kept dry.

A Useful Natural Colouring Agent.

PRIVET (Ligustrum vulgare).—A well-known plant with white flowers and small jet-black berries, which are most useful for all Thrushes and Hawfinches and Bullfinches. During the winter they will be found most useful in keeping Bullfinches and Hawfinches in good colour.

ASH (Fraxinus excelsior).—A well-known tree which produces large quantities of ash keys. I have found these readily eaten by Hawfinches and Bullfinches. They assist greatly in bringing out the rich brown colour of the Hawfinch. Store in a dry place for future use.

OAK (Quercus robur).—This well-known tree bears large quantities of acorns, eaten by Hawfinches and Jays. I tried these with Hawfinches for many years, but now find they are as well without them.

BLACKTHORN OR SLOE (Prunus spinosa).—A pretty shrub with white flowers and black fruit, the latter eaten readily by all Thrushes, Waxwings, and Hawfinches. Store packed in sawdust.

CORNEL OR DOGWOOD (Cornus sanguinea).—Grows about six feet high, has creamy-white flowers and purple berries. A grand colouring berry for Bullfinches, Hawfinches, Thrushes, and Waxwings. Store away in sawdust for future use.

ALDER (Alnus glutinosa).—The only British species; a small tree with greyish bark and small catkins, which appear before the leaves. A favourite seed of the Siskin and Redpoll. I have found these catkins exceedingly useful for getting these birds on to hard seed, also as a tit-bit during the winter.

WILD CHERRY (Prunus avium).—A handsome tree in spring, with its large racemes of white flowers. The fruit is greatly relished by all Thrushes, and the Hawfinches are very fond of the cherry stones. I gather large quantities of these for my Hawfinches; one has no difficulty in getting them under the trees.

Two Favourite Berries.

HOLLY (Ilex aquifolium).—Eaten in severe weather by the Fieldfare, Redwing, Missel and Song Thrush. Hawfinches will also eat these berries in confinement, and I use them with good results, as they assist greatly in fixing the colour of these birds. Store in sawdust for future use.

IRISH YEW (Taxus fastigiata).—The berries of this tree are readily eaten by all Thrushes and Waxwings. I had once the good fortune to see a Waxwing feeding on the yew trees, and it was a pretty sight to see it fly from branch to branch. The berries are most useful for these birds when caged; I use them largely with grand results. Hawfinches and Greenfinches are also exceedingly fond of the yew berry stones. When the berries are eaten by the Waxwings and Thrushes, they pass from them in a red pulp, and after the latter has been washed away by the rain, it leaves the stones, which are eagerly picked up by Hawfinches and Greenfinches. (To be continued.)

Questions and Answers.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaints written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence., otherwise their letters will not receive attention. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Childrens' Fund (London).

(9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 151, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff as ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John. British Birds, Mule and Hybrids—G. E. Weston. Foreign Birds—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S., &c., Wild Bird Life—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

ADDRESS (E. Husking, Ohio).—Very sorry, but I really cannot give addresses of breeders. It would be obviously unfair, and also doubtless raise a hornet's nest about our ears. Look up our advert. columns under heading "Rollers," or get a copy of CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL, wherein you will find addresses of many of the most prominent breeders.

EXCESSIVE LOOSENESS (H. W. B.).—The excessive drinking is the effect rather than the cause of the abnormal looseness of the bowels. Keep cage floor well covered with clean sand or sawdust, the perches as clean as possible, and withhold all succulent green food until the bowels have resumed a normal condition. In addition to the usual staple diet give a small teaspoonful of boiled summer rape every second day, and on the alternate days a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut dusted over with carbonate of bismuth, and then sprinkled with maw seed. Also give a few grains of hemp on those days. In the drinking water add six drops of tincture of gentian and five of tincture of opium for two days. See that your seeds are quite sound and clean, and especially that the rape is free from mites.

DIET FOR ROLLER HENS (M. L. Bidwell).—The diet for Roller hens should not differ materially from that of the cocks, which you might have seen given in detail in this column several times lately. As a staple give a mixture of two parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition, give a little soft food—egg or crushed biscuit—once or twice a week, a pinch of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, black rape, and teazle twice a week, and a little green salad daily in summer, and three or four times a week in winter. When salads are not obtainable, or not fit for use in winter, substitute a little sweet fruit. If you refer to breeding hens, give only the staple diet whilst sitting, and when young are hatched supply soft food and green food the same as you would to any other variety. It is quite wrong of the dealer to tell you to give the hens a lot of hemp. Do not do "no sich a thing," as the immortal Sairey would have said.

DOMESTIC SQUALLS (T. Robertson).—One cause of your trouble is having two cocks to the two hens. You should have put in the aviary only one cock with two hens. Remove one of the cocks at once, and keep him out of earshot of the hens. Things will then probably run smoothly. Leave the cock that appears to "rule the roost" with the hens. The cause of the hens both laying in one nest is, doubtless, a too limited choice of nesting sites, or that one was in a more favourable position, probably placed higher than the others. As a rule, if one nesting site in an aviary is materially higher than the rest there will be competition, or actually strife, for its possession. You should put in four or five nesting sites of similar pattern. As the hens agree well together they will be almost certain to rear any young that are hatched when one of the cocks is removed.

LOOKS THICK (J. Smith).—You do not give any details which enable me to form an opinion what is wrong. You ought to have said how you have been feeding the birds, where kept, and the probable age. Try the following treatment for a fortnight, and if bird is not considerably better, write again, and give these particulars. In addition to the staple seed diet give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with maw seed every second day, and on the alternate days a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet and teazle, with a sprinkling of mustard seed. Give a spray of watercress or chickweed daily, but no dandelion. Keep cage floor strewn with clean gritty sand, and beside keeping a piece of cuttlefish in the cage, stick a cube of hard common salt in the wires for hen to peck at. Add 20 drops of whisky and as much sulphate of soda as will cover a sixpence, to the water for three consecutive days, and afterwards six drops of tincture of gentian and three of tincture of steel every second day for a week. You need not separate the birds during the treatment.

TO BRING UP TO SCRATCH (J. C. S.).—Keep the birds caged separately side by side, or, preferably, the hen in a breeding cage, and the cock hung on front in a nursery cage, until you see him calling the hen and feeding her freely through the wires. Feed them the same as advised to "Quiz," last week. As regards the cock mule being so forward, it would be useless putting any cock with the hen until she is herself ready to mate. The mule would doubtless mate freely enough, but the chance of a successful result would be exceedingly remote. Mules, you should know, are generally supposed to be sterile.

BALD PATCH ON NECK (M. A. J.).—It is very doubtful whether you can effect any improvement until next moulting season. You might try the following for a month or six weeks. In addition to the staple seed diet, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur, and sprinkled with maw seed, every third day, and once in each interval give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, black rape, millet and teazle. Give a spray of green food daily, or as a substitute, occasionally, a little banana. Keep cage floor strewn with clean gritty sand, and stick a piece of cuttlefish in wires for bird to peck at. Allow the bath quite freely in mild weather. In the drinking water add six drops of dandelion juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a threepennypiece every second day each alternate week. Slightly moisten the bare place with sulphur ointment twice a week for a month, but do not make a mess of the bird.

A FICKLE DAME (Willie, Belfast).—I think you only need to have patience for a little while. The hen is not quite up to concert pitch, but will doubtless set to work in earnest at the first touch of really mild settled weather. I presume she has a nest pan available. Give a small tuft of cow-hair for her to play with, but not a full supply of nesting material until she is ready to make use of it. Give a small teaspoonful of egg food, with the same quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame mixed in it every second day, and on the alternate days a pinch of equal parts hemp, niger, and teazle; also a little crisp young dandelion daily. In the water add as much sulphate of soda as will cover a threepennypiece every second day for a week.

HEAVY BREATHING (Septre).—I am inclined to think the trouble of this hen arises from over-feeding, but still, in view of your losses last season, should the bird die I would advise you to send the body to Mr. Yates for a post-mortem, as per rules under heading "Post Mortems." Meantime, keep cages, perches, and water vessels scrupulously clean, and the cage floor strewn with clean gritty sand. Keep in a comfortable temperature and free from cold draughts. Give a staple diet of plain canary only for a fortnight, and supplement it with a liberal supply of crisp, fresh green food. Twice a week give a small teaspoonful of soaked and sprouting rape. Limit the diet strictly to these items for the time named. In the drinking water give every second day for a week the rhubarb and soda aperient mentioned in reply to "Pat" this week, and in the next week give 20 drops of Chemical Food every second day. See that the hemp you use is quite sound and sweet in kernel.

DESERTING EGGS (Unaccountable).—Right, your pseudonym is applicable. It is not always possible to account for these idiosyncrasies, they are often nothing more. But in your case the reason of the young hens deserting the nest three days after commencing to sit is obvious. It is wholly due to the desire to begin nesting again, which you say is keen upon them. Had the cocks been left with them it would have made no difference, unless it had been to hasten forward the premature desire to nest. I have had hens that absolutely refused to sit unless the cock was with them, but it is not likely that both your hens would prove of that type. Your treatment seems to have been quite correct, and as both the hens are quite young, I do not think it likely they will behave in the same way again. As you are running two hens with one cock, it is not advisable to leave the cock with either hen until young are hatched. You should either remove when eggs are set, or leave him with hen until young are ready to separate. If you follow the same plan next time as you did the last, I do not think you will find the same trouble.

A CLUTCH OF ONE (Moccasine).—The first hen was not in proper breeding condition. Your best course was to let her sit on the one egg for its full time, even if it did not hatch, or if you had other odd or deserted eggs you might have made her up a clutch of three or four. Then you should have removed the cock and let him put the other hen to nest. Treat the hen now the same as advised to "Alex. B. McF.," in last issue, except that instead of the buckthorn, add to the water the first three days the rhubarb and soda aperient as advised to "Pat" in this issue. By the time the cock has put the other hen to nest this one should be ready to make a fresh start. You do not say whether the hens are yellow or buff variegated, so I cannot say whether you are doing right by mating a buff cock with them. They ought really to be yellow variegated, but even then to make a suitable match other typical features have to be taken into account.

BIRDROOM QUERIES (Caxton).—The variation in temperature of practically 30degs. will certainly prove very detrimental if it occurs frequently and suddenly. The amount of glass in front is partly accountable for this, but the chief cause, I fancy, is the "filling" you have used for the walls. I do not know what the "wood waste" you mention consists of, unless it is chips and shavings, which would be of very little use for the purpose for which I recommend sawdust or "wool waste." You must have misread the latter for "wood waste," unless the printer made an error which escaped my notice. "Wool waste," I suspect, is not common, except in districts where textile manufactories abound. I cannot see how the lantern on roof is connected by airway with the inner house, neither is it at all necessary, seeing that you have exits for foul air in the upper angles of the ends. On the other hand, I see no provision whatever to admit fresh air except by the open window. Therefore I would advise you to seal the apertures in the ends on the inside boards, leaving the holes in the outer boards open, make an airway from these between the inner and outer boards down to the floor, and then make an aperture in the inner boards next the floor to connect air shaft with inside of room. Then you would need the lantern on roof as an exit. If this is too difficult, make an aperture 6in. by 4in. near the floor in the middle of front and cover inside and outside with perforated zinc. This will admit fresh air, and you can then dispense with either the roof or end ventilation, and the result will doubtless go far towards eliminating the serious fluctuations. (2) To remove the smell of paint, evaporate an ounce or so of strong vinegar on a hot shovel morning and evening for two or three consecutive days. Keep plenty of ventilation on at other times to assist in hardening the paint. The smell will recur more or less until paint is hard dry. (3) If you arrange ventilation as advised in No. 1, you will not need to keep casement open throughout the day except in sultry summer weather. (4) Provided it does not necessitate a dank, moist atmosphere in the room, it will do no harm to grow seeds in boxes on the floor.

A CHANGE (L.S.).—The snap of very cold weather may very likely be partly accountable for the hen not setting her house in order at once, and she could not have been very forward as you believed. The "unfriendliness" when birds were put together is not a bad sign at all, and the cock ceasing his song is nothing at all unusual. Therefore, altogether I think you only need a little patience, and things will begin to develop favourably presently. If hen has not yet started building a nest, remove the material, but not the nest-pan, and leave just a little tuft of cow-hair for birds to play with until you see the hen engaged busily in the nest-pan scratching and twisting round. Then is the time to give a full supply of material. See reply to "Quiz" in last issue and treat your birds the same.

EGG EATING (Georgiee).—When the birds are of sufficient merit to warrant the trouble to save their eggs for hatching, trap-nests and foster-parents are the only methods worth troubling about. Filling shells with noxious substances for the birds to investigate, or keeping two or three china eggs in the nest for them to work off their energy upon, are believed by some fanciers to be useful. Personally, I have little faith in them. To try the former plan, mustard with a pinch of salt mixed to a cream with strong vinegar is about the least appreciated by the birds. You will find an illustration of a special nest-box for saving the eggs of egg-eaters in Part VII. of "Our Canaries," and the text referring to same in Part VIII. The hen may lay a few more eggs if they were all taken away and hatched by fosters, but it is doubtful whether she would go on laying over a long period, although some hens would do so. I should be most reluctant to entrust such confirmed egg-eaters to hatch out a brood, even if they appeared to reform so far as to complete a clutch without feasting upon it.

A CLOSE SITTER (Sweating Hen).—I am afraid I cannot give you an infallible preventive of "sweating," as some hens appear quite incorrigible. You ought to have said how you were feeding the hen and her age. If she is a young bird of last season it is quite possible she may rear the next and future broods quite successfully. Let the cock remain with her next time. This may help to prevent her becoming lethargic and careless. Do not overfeed them with egg food the first few days. A teaspoonful morning and afternoon should be ample for the first four or five days, even when the cock is present. Begin to give a little fresh crisp green food on the fourth day, or, if the hen shows signs of flagging before this time, give a little green food at once, and continue the supply in small quantities, fresh two or three times daily. Also keep a little rape seed soaking in cold water, changing water daily to keep it sweet and fresh, and as soon as hen shows any signs of flagging, give a teaspoonful of this soaked and sprouting rape daily. Simply drain off the water before giving it. In any case you may give this seed from about a week old, as it is a very wholesome food for the young and helps to keep the parents keen on feeding. Beyond this, treat the birds the same as advised in "Canary Breeding for Beginners," and interfere with the nest or young as little as possible. By the bye, there is no fear whatever of a hen sitting too closely at this time of year, especially with the weather we have been having. The fact that two young were dead in shell was more likely to be due to weak germs, and this may also throw light on the hen not feeding those that were hatched.

ACCOMMODATION, ETC. (H. R. S.).—(1) Sorry I misinterpreted your meaning, and if you enclosed a sketch of your room last time, as I fancy you did, I have not got it by me now, and cannot tell what wall space you have available for cages, hence my reply must necessarily be somewhat indefinite. The best size for a single breeding cage is 20ins. long, 16ins. high, and 10 deep (that is from back to front). A double breeding-cage should be 40ins. long, and the same height and depth. I should prefer the single cage as above, and the use of separate nursery cages for the cock or young as required rather than the cage you suggest, viz., 24ins. long and a 9in. space at one end wired off to separate cock or young, as this would make the larger compartment a very cramped breeder. Assuming you have the whole of one of the 15ft. walls available, by using the 20in. single cages, you could arrange the cages on a rack in three tiers, starting at 18ins. from the floor, which would make the top tier reach to about 5ft. 9ins., not too high for comfortably attending to them. Each tier would hold eight cages comfortably. Therefore, you could very comfortably house 24 pairs. One or two large flights could be placed on the other walls. If only a 15ft. wall is available, by a similar arrangement, you could accommodate 21 cages and pairs. This number, or even a few more, you could house with perfect safety, from a hygienic standpoint, provided the cages, and food and water supply are kept perfectly clean and pure, and the room properly ventilated. Given these fundamental conditions, there is exceedingly little danger to be apprehended from septic fever unless the infection is accidentally introduced from an infected source. (2) I do not consider rain water the best for birds' drinking purposes. Its collection and storage is too apt to cause contamination. If the ordinary service supply is good enough for humans, in whose interest its purity is closely supervised, it is certainly good enough for the birds. (3) It would depend upon the individual hen whether it would be safe to transfer eggs about to hatch to a hen that had only just finished laying. I would not advise doing so unless the hen had sat a few days, or her temperament was fully known.

SQUEAK AND GAPE (Pat).—The affected birds are in all probability susceptible to changes of weather, and require to be in a fairly comfortable temperature where the fluctuations are as trifling as possible. It need not be very warm, nor artificially heated, but should be just away from the chilly side. Your room seems to be quite a suitable one, but you should see that no direct cold draughts blow from the window on to these birds. It would be much the wiser plan to keep window open only at the top until the weather becomes more warm and settled. Give a staple diet of plain canary only. Every second day for a fortnight give half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion, and four of sherry mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, rape, niger, millet, and teazle. Give a leaf of dandelion daily. In the drinking water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb, and as much sulphate of soda as will cover a threepennypiece for three days. After this give every second day for a fortnight 20 drops of the following mixture, which any chemist will put up for you: Two drachms each of glycerine and oxymel of squills, one drachm each of chlorodyne and ipecac. wine, and eight grains of iodide of potassium.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

WHAT BIRD? (L. J. L.).—I must congratulate you on the excellent diagram which has made my task quite an easy one; it is a Grey Java Sparrow, and will thrive on a diet of canary and white millet seeds, about equal parts, with grit, cuttlebone, and green food regularly. These are smart, dapper birds, and very fond of their bath, which should be of the type that hangs outside the cage over the open door; such are procurable from almost any bird dealer. A millet spray and a few crushed oats help to vary the diet. The Java Sparrow is a hardy species, but must not be placed in a draught. Of course, it goes without saying, that no bird will thrive unless its cage is large enough to allow it to take reasonable exercise.

BIRDS FOR KITCHEN AVIARY (A. Hart).—The only fault of your kitchen aviary is its narrowness from back to front. I gather that you are somewhat indifferent as to their breeding or otherwise, because after all your aviary is only really a roomy cage. Here are a few you could keep together in the cage: 1 pair each Green Budgerigars and Java Sparrows, and one Pekin Robin; or 1 pair each Green and Yellow Budgerigars; or 1 pair each Zebra and Ribbon Finches and Green Singing Finches. As a mixed series, you could keep 1 pair each Avadavats, Gold-breasted and Orange-cheek Waxbills (4s. 6d. per pair); cocks, Grey Singing and Alario Finches. As regards diet: Canary, white millet, and millet sprays, with greenfood, grit, and cuttlebone would meet the needs of the majority of the above; a few crushed oats for the Budgerigars and Java Sparrows to pick over, and a little soft food and ripe fruit for the Pekin Robin would complete the "bill of fare." Our Nutshells: No. 18, Budgerigars, No. 16, Avadavats, No. 19, Pekin Nightingale, No. 20 Waxbills, all 2½d. post free, from our Manager would help you.

DOVES (Glenfield).—The pair of Doves you have are Barbary Turtle Doves, other hardy species you could keep are: Senegal Turtle Doves, Diamond, Passerine, Peaceful, Picui, and Australian Crested Doves. All are hardy, and usually prove free breeders. Watch our advert. columns, and secure pairs as opportunity offers. There is a chapter on the Diamond Dove in "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1s. 1½d. post free from our Manager), and the treatment given there would apply to most of the species mentioned above, with the addition of a little hemp, dari and wheat for the Senegal Turtle and Crested Pigeons, or if you care to send me a stamped address wrapper per Editor, I shall be pleased to send you a reprint of an article I have by me on the Diamond Dove.

ORANGE WEAVER OR BISHOP (A. L. T.).—A sketchy description is fiery orange, with scarlet washes in aged birds, with the mantle and wing-coverts bright cinnamon brown, with dark shaft streaks, and the crown, sides of head, chin, chest, and abdomen shining velvety black; flight and tail feathers brown, with paler margins. Your birds are evidently either immature, or in undress plumage, and will assume the breeding plumage later. Send me a description when this takes place, and I can tell you what they are. The Scarlet and Black Weavers which have been offered lately are, I believe, the Crimson-crowned Weaver, larger than the Orange, and more fiery red. The Grenadier Weaver might also be sold as such. The Madagascar is frequently sold as the Scarlet Weaver. Possess yourself with patience, and if you are not acquainted with the Weavers, the change of the males from winter to summer (breeding or nuptial) plumage will appear to you little short of miraculous.

WHAT BIRD? (Tonsorial).—Please describe shape of bill and state whether the feet are those of a land or water bird. It would really be a waste of time for me to attempt to search it out without some idea. At such a distance from land one is not safe to assume even that it is an American species. Kindly supply me the above details as far as possible, and I will try and pick out the species. I am retaining your query for reference.

GREY PARROT GAPING (Mrs. Curtis).—This can arise from several causes, and till you tell me how long you have had the bird, where you keep it, and how it is and has been fed and treated, I am powerless to help you. In the meantime, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water, and repeat the dose after an interval of three days. On receipt of the above information shall be pleased to help you further.

FOR GREENHOUSE AVIARY (Robin).—(1) Grey Javas and the Pekin may give you trouble later on: I am afraid so many odd British species may militate against successful breeding, and the Pekin is certainly a bit of an epicure and rather fond of eggs for breakfast; moreover, practically all the indigenous species you have are notorious disbudders, and even evergreens will not enjoy a very long life with them. A pair of Zebra Finches (7s. 6d.) would be almost certain breeders, and they certainly are pretty and interesting, if not gorgeous. A pair of Gouldian Finches (20s. to 30s.) would also be very probable breeders. You could also add a pair each of Avadavats (3s. 6d.), and Gold-breasted Waxbills (3s. 6d.), they are both beautiful, and may breed; prices given are approx. and per pair. Nutshells 14, 16, 18, and 20 would assist you, 2½d. each, post free, from our Manager. If you retain the British species I should advise a good sized common broad leaved laurel, and a couple of box trees, place them so that there are no perches immediately above them, and an occasional syringing will keep them fairly clean; euonymus is also a nice bush for the purpose, but the Finches are fond of the succulent shoots. As regards the Budgies, the yellow cock will ultimately choose any other odd hen (green or yellow) there may be available, and in such case nearly all your young Budgies will be pure Greens, with only an occasional yellow one. To obviate this, the only thing you can do is to take out the Yellows till the Greens are feeding young, then put them back again, and during the intervening period they should be well paired, and should settle down to nesting operations at once—of course, you must see that there are several unoccupied husks, barrels, or logs for them to choose from.

GREEN BUDGERIGARS (H. E. A.).—You can give either the glauber salts as directed, or Dinneford's Magnesia, the latter neat direct to the beak. Whichever you use, only give three drops at a time; you can also give it them in the water twice a week; on these days catch the birds, and give them the three drops direct to the beak, so as to ensure them getting it, but do not give the drops rapidly one after the other. Do not give a second drop till after the first has been swallowed; to give even a largeish bird a quarter spoonful of liquid straightaway would produce apparent convulsions, owing to the bird being in a choking condition for a time. If your bird is accustomed to take a crust, or piece of biscuit, you can soak this in either mixture, and supply to the bird when dry again. A fly round the room when convenient will also be very beneficial. Not having space for wing exercise is very detrimental to the health of Budgerigars.

GOULDIAN FINCHES (Gould).—It is these cold snaps that are really dangerous at this season. Mostly they begin to incubate with the fourth egg, and all the chicks are hatched within a day of each other. I should say, however, that the clutch is rather variable, and that six eggs are by no means uncommon, and often four forms the full clutch. It is quite true that many Gouldian Finches rear entirely on seed and green food, the latter seeding grass, etc., in unlimited quantities; but it is certainly wise to test them with a little good insectile mixture (soft food), and milk sop, both of which they take fairly freely of in my aviaries. Allow a bath on sunny genial days. By all means try your method in case of desertion. There is a prospect of success, but shelled and soaked seed should form some part of their menu. While they are rearing young let the supply of spray millet be continuous.

FOR INDOOR AVIARY-CAGE (Starter).—I am afraid you still have not a very comprehensive idea as to space required for any real probability of breeding success. Very many of those who have no aviary accommodation give a 2½ to 3ft. cage to each pair, and I certainly advise you not to overcrowd, and also not to include either Budgerigars or Pekin Robins with Finches in such space. You are more likely to have decent luck with three or, at the most, four pairs than with overcrowding it. It will also be better for you to gain a little experience with the freely imported species before trying the more costly kinds. Zebra Finches would be practically certain breeders; Avadavats and Gold-breasted Waxbill, small and beautiful, but only probable breeders; and for the other pair you could choose from Ribbon and Bib Finches, Bronze Mannikins, Long-tailed or Rufous-tailed Grassfinches. Your idea of the aviary-cage having only wire front is sound. If the above does not quite meet your need, consider the replies given, definitely decide what course you intend to take, and then if you write again I can give you a definite reply. Use twiggy branches as perches, and have several evergreens in pots, one of which could go in for a week and then be replaced by another, and so on. Perches should not be over the plants.

IN POOR PLUMAGE (J. Fordham).—So far as I can gather from your remarks the bird is progressing favourably, but it will take some little time for it to recover tone and plumage. Continue the treatment for another month, and then let me know how matters stand. Does this bird bathe? If not, you must spray it at least once a week with tepid water, but guard against a chill while these cold winds last. Anoint the bare places with Zam-buk, but do not use sufficient for it to run among and grease the surrounding plumage; if the bird will permit you to handle it freely, sponge the bare areas, say every other day with tepid water containing a little Condy's Fluid, and after drying with a soft cloth, anoint with Zam-buk. This should prevent the accumulation of grease. Leave out the oats, wheat and maize, but do not permit it to feed on sunflower and hemp alone. Get some local fancier or dealer to have a look at the beak. From your sketch it appears as if the lower mandible wants trimming back a little. Do you supply it with cuttlebone and wood to cut up? As a rule, when these are supplied a Parrot keeps its own mandibles properly ground down.

AILING GREY PARROT (H. Degg).—Give three drops of tasteless castor oil direct to the beak, and dissolve three drops of tincture of opium in one ounce of tepid water, and give this as drinking water for the day, stirring it at intervals. If it will not drink, give two or three drops of it at intervals of two or three hours during the day. Give it a little sop to tempt it, prepared as follows: a few pieces of plain sweet biscuit, break up into smallish pieces, allow half a teaspoonful of bynophosphates to soak in, sprinkle with moist sugar, and pour over it as much boiling water as the biscuit will absorb. As soon as it commences to eat its usual food again, gradually wean it from the boiled maize, and feed as advised in our Nutshell, "The Grey Parrot" (2½d. post free from our Manager). If it appears to need a stimulant, let it have a few sips of weak brandy and water (chilled) at intervals during the second day, and as long as required. You can give the opium water for two days consecutively, and then let several days elapse before repeating it; but if the bird resumes its food it should not be necessary. Your letter, while perhaps as full as you can make it, does not enable me to draw any definite conclusion, but the above palliatives should give relief. You had better report progress in seven days, and make your details as full as possible. N.B.—Follow the opium water by a course of byno-phosphates, half-teaspoonful in the daily supply of drinking water.

AFRICAN GREY PARROT (B. Twiss).—(1) It should be saying a few words now. Are you teaching it at all? I assume it is quite tame. Whenever you feed it, or are in its vicinity talk to it, accustom it to your voice, and whenever it is in restful mood repeat over and over again (quietly and distinctly) some short sentence you would like it to repeat, and when that is learned take up another. Once a start is made progress will be rapid, and it will then pick up many words and calls without teaching. (2) It is possibly only the moult, but give it a mild laxative half-teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in its drinking twice a week for a month, and follow this by the same quantity of byno-phosphates in the drinking water every other day for another month. If you have not got our Nutshell, "The Grey Parrot," get it (2½d. post free from our Manager), it will give you full details as to food and general treatment. Such items as the bird continually rejects could be left out of its mixture, but do not permit it to feed entirely on sunflower and hemp. Most Greys are fond of sweet apple, and let it have a little of any green food (lettuce, etc.) it will take. You cannot force it to bathe, but if it does not, spray it (use a "mist" sprayer) once a week in winter, and twice a week in summer and autumn (of course, taking precaution against a chill) with tepid water. Use a weak solution of quassia occasionally as a precaution against parasites. (3) This query should have gone to our Canary specialist. You had better repeat it to him next week, but the prices run from two guineas up to quite a high figure, according to talent.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

A SQUIRREL.—It is possible for any type of Canary to have pink eyes, but it can only do so if it has cinnamon blood in its veins. In other words, the pink-eye is the hall-mark, so to speak, of cinnamon blood. It is quite true that Sib.-bred hens often possess pink eyes, but only because they are bred from stock containing a large percentage of cinnamon blood. Thus your friend is wrong in saying that it is the Sib.-bred Canary which has pink eyes; in reality it is the cinnamon Canary. A bird may be Sib.-bred, yet show no trace of the pink eye.

A THRUSH'S TROUBLE (Cymro).—It is probably the commencement of a cold. Give for one day dissolved in the drinking water, as much sulphate of soda as just covers a shilling (not heaped up). Follow this with a few daily doses (a small teaspoonful) of a mixture composed of one ounce each of glycerine, oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, and whiskey.

IN AN AVIARY (A Novice).—It is not necessary to pair up each couple in a separate cage before turning them into the aviary; the different species will at once sort themselves out. It is not wise to turn in odd hens (nor odd cocks, either), as unmated birds can be very troublesome. You must be careful not to put in over many couples, or this will seriously militate against your chances of success.

BRITISH BIRD & HYBRID QUERISTS

The best items to bring the birds into breeding condition are the wild seeds, i.e., groundsel, chickweed, shepherd's purse, dandelion, and seeding grass, one and all of which are easily obtainable. Almost any evergreen is suitable for use, box, privet, laurel, fir, euonymous, etc. You should put up corner "thickets" made of pea sticks, dead fir branches, etc.

SIX AT ONCE (G. J. Green).—(1) Any cage not less than 30 x 16 x 14 inches would be excellent. (2) It is very doubtful indeed. Hen Bullies are most unreliable mothers when in cages. Best always to transfer eggs to hen Canary. (3) I really don't understand what you mean by "shrub to fake the nest with." Anyway, I gave all necessary particulars as regards the nesting arrangements for a hen Bullfinch in reply to "D.C." last week. (4) Have never heard of Hybrids between Himalayan Goldfinch and Bullfinch. The value would not be particularly high, so far as the exhibiting fancier is concerned, at any rate, for they would not be admitted into the ordinary Hybrid classes, but would have to compete as foreign bird Hybrids, and special classes for these are few and far between. They would have a value for collectors of rarities, of course. (5) I think you will be referring to Mr. St. John's recipe, and I haven't this by me. Ask him to repeat it in his columns. (6) Sometimes the Great Tit is spoken of as the "Blackcap," but this is, of course, only a local name for the species. The true Blackcap Warbler is a very different bird, with grey body plumage, and jet black cap; the hen has a rufous cap, so is easily distinguished.

THE SISKIN'S BIB (Dr. E.S.).—Yes, a housemoult often (in fact, generally) causes the bib of a Siskin to disappear, or to become smaller and very faint. It is not always the case, however, for I have known birds to retain an excellent bib after moulting; it is a bit of a puzzle.

MULING IN AN AVIARY (Folkestonian).—Your aviary is not large enough to accommodate all the birds you specify if you wish them to breed. Leave out the cock Yellowhammer and Bramblefinch, and they might quite likely get along harmoniously. If birds are at all crowded, the chances of breeding results become very small. The aviary, judging by your description, is very suitable. Turn out the birds any time now when the weather is at all genial.

TWO ITEMS (Southview, Sussex).—I cannot decipher your name. (1) Paint the swelling daily for a short time with a little tincture of iodine. (2) The aviary is very large, and the pairs you mention should do well in it. As additional inmates, you could select any of the Finches (I include the Buntings in this). Snow, Reed, Yellow, Lapland, Meadow, Cirl, and Black-headed Buntings are all very desirable aviary birds, though some of them are not easy to obtain (the Meadow and Black-headed, in particular).

LINNET "OFF COLOUR" (T.E.K.).—The best medicine you can try is a mixture of one ounce each of tincture of rhubarb and tincture of gentian. Stir a small half-teaspoonful into two tablespoonfuls of drinking water, fresh daily, for at least five or six days.

AN OUTDOOR AVIARY (Hybrid).—(1) You could comfortably moult 40 to 50 birds in the place, but half-a-dozen Hybrid couples would be the limit, though a few hen Canaries could be added as well. (2) You should put plenty of branches (or small thickets of pea sticks) in as well as nesting receptacles. (4) Put in a skylight; don't on any account have open (uncovered) wire netting. Take my advice and do not concrete the whole of the floor—leave some of it earth (it is easily renewable).

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 5, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

J.L.G.—Metritis, due to septic infection, viz., inflammation of the oviduct, the lungs also participated, as is common in these cases from absorption of septic products.

C. M. Wilcott.—Ulceration of the bowels of some standing, primarily due to toxic substances ingested with the food. You should have tried dilute sulphuric acid in the drinking water, together with a suitable diet.

H.R.D.—Disease of the liver, known as cirrhosis or hardening, and enlargement of that organ, generally traceable to impurities taken at some time with the food. The body was greatly distended by this organ, giving the appearance of a bird eggbound, but on dissection it was found that the liver occupied almost the entire body cavity. The disease was of long standing, and no treatment would have availed.

B. Dalton.—The presence of a soft-shelled egg in the oviduct, with inability to pass same, resulting in death from exhaustion. The usual form of treatment is to resort to steaming with hot water, to allow the parts to sufficiently relax to facilitate the passage of the egg. Puncture of the egg is sometimes performed, using a very fine stiletto, but this procedure needs great care. Warmth acts magically in some of the cases, by placing the cage in front of a good fire or gas stove, relief is often effected. Inertia of the walls of the oviduct is generally responsible, particularly in birds of an overfat condition.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

S. Wilkinson.—We do not know anything of the actual makers.

J. T. Jones.—Sorry, but we have illustrated this several times. It is a well-known and widely used device.

W. Hornby.—We are very much obliged to you for your suggestion, which shall certainly be carried into effect.

In the Courts.

Live Crow Used as Scarecrow.

An unusual case of cruelty was recently investigated by the magistrates at the Shire Hall, Nottingham, when John Trickett, a farmer, of Annesley Woodhouse, was summoned for cruelty to a Crow.

A gamekeeper employed by Mr. J. P. Chaworth Musters found a Crow pegged down by a piece of cord round its leg, in one of the defendant's fields. The other leg was broken, as though in a trap. The keeper had previously seen defendant set traps and bait them with potato.

A constable who was fetched killed the bird, and then went to see Trickett, who admitted that he had caught the Crow in a trap and tied it down alive so as to frighten other Crows off the field. Defendant told Inspector Keast, of the R.S.P.C.A., that the field had been black with Crows.

Through Mr. C. E. W. Lucas, who defended, Trickett pleaded that he had no intention of committing cruelty, although he now realised that it was a wrong thing to do, but he thought a live Crow would be more effectual than a dead one. The string was two or three yards in length. Mr. Lucas added that defendant had had this farm all his life, and that it had been in his family for generations. In view of his previous good character he asked that he might be let off on payment of costs.—The bench acceded to this view. The costs amounted to 13s.—"Nottingham Guardian."

Mother and Foster-mother.

A correspondent writes to the "Birmingham Daily Mail," Mar. 1:—"Last spring in the hedge was a Thrush's nest, and we used to sit and watch the old birds, assisted by a Starling, feed the young (the old birds had to clear every time the Starling arrived with food), and the system adopted by the feeders was to fetch a worm and apparently give each young bird a lick at it, though by some method it was divided, because at the finish there was none left. They then fled to one of two holly trees and fetched berries. Next journey was another worm, and so all three birds alternated flesh and fruit. We afterwards put the nest in a box and hung it on a wall. The old birds found it, and the same method went on. The trees are close to the bedroom windows, and I am thus able to see very closely what goes on."

Correspondence.

New Society for Dunston-on-Tyne.

Sir,—It is proposed to commence a cage bird society in connection with the Dunston-on-Tyne Excelsior Working Men's Social Club. Will any local fancier interested please communicate with me at 13, Athol Street, or at the Club?

A. W. Lord.

A Bird Within a Bird.

Sir,—On getting my Cage Birds on Friday last, I was struck by the fact that on the frontispiece, in the region of the Hawfinch's eye, appears the exact shape of another bird. I don't know if you noticed it, or if it would interest other readers. Let them look at it and try and solve the "puzzle." It was only through my habit of perusing Cage Birds so minutely that I discovered it.

F. Harrison.

Black Mealworms.

Sir,—Some time ago, if I remember rightly, Mr. Claude St. John in your columns denied the existence of a dark variety of mealworms. I have not his statement by me, and am only writing from memory. I think he stated it was only unhealthy specimens that went dark. I tried to put him right, but don't think he was convinced, so having just received a quantity from our mill here, quite 90 per cent. of which are always dark, I herewith send you a few to see that I was right. I also send two or three of the light variety for you to see the difference. Perhaps you may be able to let Mr. St. John see them. It would be interesting to find out if they breed true to colour, but breeding mealworms is a long job. I consider it takes twelve months, although a correspondent in Cage Birds some time ago, stated that if a few mealworms were put into a box with some bran, etc., in about three months they would have bred thousands.

C. P. Arthur.

The sample sent by Mr. Arthur was seen by Mr. F. Thruber, a well-known British bird fancier, and he stated that he had previously had similar dark coloured (practically black) mealworms, the colour of which he had thought to be due to the fact that they were fed on malt and not the usual kind of meal.—Editor.

What Constitutes a "Lottery?"

Interesting Sidelights on the Gateshead Prosecution.

Sir,—Apropos of the prosecution by the Police of the Gateshead Society for the prize drawing they held, it is interesting to note a paragraph in a contemporary mentioning the fact that one of the Leeds Football Club players (who is also a fancier) received his benefit when they played Notts Forest. That of itself is of little interest to your readers, but in this report it mentioned that some firm had given a bicycle to be won by the person who bought the programme bearing a certain lucky number. This number was drawn from a bag by the referee in full view of the spectators, and the bag was escorted to the centre of the field by two policemen, so that everything should be above board. The two cases are analagous, yet in Gateshead, where a society wanted to raise money to pay off their debts, the police take action, but in Leeds, where a rich club wanted to make a present of £750 to a popular idol, they even offer their services! There's a great injustice somewhere, but I am informed on good authority that if a society wants to hold a draw, all they have to do is to hold it under the "Arts Club" rules, and they are within the law. From what I can gather, it appears that all they need to do is to print on their tickets the information that the lucky winner of a prize has the option of buying it at his own price, which only need be a penny. Very truly it is said that there is no law on the statute book through which you can't drive a coach and four.

Sub Rosa.

At the meeting of the City and Suburban A.C.B., held April 14, the secretary offered a fine iced cake to the member or visitor who came nearest to fore-casting the number of persons present at a given time during the evening. Considerable consternation (!) ensued amongst the officials when the following letter was handed in (also, needless to say, many hearty laughs at the joke perpetrated by a well-known member not unconnected with the legal profession).

85, Bucklersbury, E.C.

To the Secretary,
City and Suburban Canary B.A.

Sir,—It has come to our notice that a cake covered with a thick layer of almond paste, and valued at 10s. 6d., is to be the prize in a competition to be held at the meeting of the society, of which you are the secretary, on Monday, the 14th inst. We beg to inform you that such proceedings as you appear to contemplate in the matter of the cake seem to us to be an infringement of the Lottery Acts, and therefore illegal. Our representative will call at the meeting of your society on Monday next; he will be the last to enter the room prior to 9.15 p.m. If the above mentioned cake is immediately handed to him we propose to take no further action in this matter. But if this course is not adopted and the cake is not delivered to our representative, we shall have no alternative but to inform the Public Prosecutor in order that legal proceedings may be taken against you under the Lottery Acts.—We are, Sir, yours faithfully,

Hitchcoke & Pertinax (Solrs.).

Early Breeding of Wild Birds.

Sir,—I read with pleasure your reports of early nesting, and the various summer migrants noted. Mr. Geo. Crabb's report of the House Martin being seen on April 6th is very interesting to me, as I have a record of their arrival in the same district (Watford) for a number of years and find the average date is about the end of April. There is no doubt our very mild winter has brought a number across much earlier than usual. My first in this district (Mardy, Glam.) is the Wheatear, April 9, and I am not likely to see many other varieties here, as the country is simply barren mountains. There will be the Whinchat and probably the Ring Ouzel, but there is no cover for anything else.

J. Goodall.

Sir,—The Goldfinch has always been a great favourite of mine, and I was very successful three or four years back with the exhibiting of the same, winning twice at the Crystal Palace and once at Earl's Court, besides 4th at Camberwell, my bird each time being claimed at catalogue price. I have always found the best way to keep my Finches in condition is to keep them on a staple diet of good sound flax and canary in equal parts, and give in a separate feeding vessel twice a week half a teaspoonful of hemp, niger, thistle and dandelion. For green food watercress, young dandelion leaves, and the heads when ripe. During the winter months I give a slice of ripe apple twice a week. I make a usual thing of spraying two or three times a week. I am not a believer in medicines of any kind. I find that once a Finch is very bad and goes light he never seems to recover his true vigour again. My intentions are to start exhibiting again this coming show season. I wish Cage Birds every success.

Sir,—Allow me to thank "Pro Bono Publico" for his timely letter regarding the use of coarse gravel, thick spars, and distinguishing marks on show cages, especially in the Border Fancy section. I am sure if his suggestions were carried out by the B.F.C.C. it would help matters greatly; but there still would be the question of cages, which is another drawback to the Fancy. A few seasons ago I heard a remark passed in a show about a fancier offering 10s. for another's cage; surely there was something special about it? Permit me to say to your correspondent, "Plainhead," who feels rather upset at me putting my name to my letter, that if he is one of the innocent party, let him do likewise, and perhaps it will be to his advantage regarding the judging of shows. Surely the many readers of this paper will have some sympathy with one who has suffered so badly through suspicion resting on the wrong man. No., "P.H.," I did not boastfully assure the Fancy that if given a chance at open shows I would give the best of satisfaction, for I am afraid I should have rather a hard task, but I said I hoped to see the day when I would judge open shows, when I would judge according to my opinion, and would not require to mark "soft" on an honourable fancier's cage, when I had put a friend's inferior bird first or second. You say some of my prizes were won under a judge I frequently purchased birds from. You, who are innocent, ought to name the show, and I will know what you mean. You do not feel inclined to answer my question with regard to the use of coarse gravel, thick spars, etc. I told your many readers that when he, "P. H.," was challenged about coarse gravel he used the thick spars. Again, you deny my statements as regards purchasing two of your winners in an Edinburgh bird stores at 2s. Your memory is surely failing you; do you not remember where you purchased the cinnamon marks you showed all the season? If not I will send you along the show reports where they won, and perhaps it will refresh your memory a bit. I do not intend to "sweep decks" next season, nor did I say so, but if all goes well I will exhibit as many birds as I can afford at every show where there is not a "clique" judge. Let me ask the members of the B.F.C.C. to examine the list of prize winners (club specials) carefully, and they will have no difficulty in finding out the select band. It would be easier for them had the judges' names been printed along with the shows, which, no doubt, ought to have been done. Allow me to thank you, Mr. Editor, for taking this matter up, for it has proved beyond doubt that our supposed "imaginations" have been correct, and no doubt it will benefit entries at Scottish shows in the coming season.

W. Lambie.

Whitburn.

[In the present unsatisfactory state of the law of libel, we have had no option but to delete a certain paragraph from the above letter. If Mr. Lambie can substantiate specific charges of fraudulent conduct (for that is what they amount to) at the shows, against any particular person, he should make them before the show committees, or the committee of the B.F.C.C., who are privileged to deal with such matters. Newspapers have no such privilege.—Editor.]

Sir,—Kindly allow me to reply to some of "Plainhead's" inconsistent remarks in his latest attempt to defend the "clique." He told me distinctly (in fact, it has been his main point throughout) that my guessing was wrong, and now, when faced with the truth of it, he, as usual, runs away from it—he says it does not apply to him. But, "Plainhead," yours was one of the medals I guessed right. I prefer being called a prophet rather than a clique judge. I have also accepted all his offers, including that of Feb. 1st, but "Plainhead" has always kept clear and opened up new ground, so long as it suited his own ends. A small case possibly can hold all my prize cards, and still find room for "Plainhead's." Seeing you refused my challenge, I will make you an easier one. You ask me to give the names of judges and shows. I would be only too pleased to do so, but I am sorry the Editor would not print them owing to the law of libel. That is his business, not ours. I will, however, meet you half-way (say Edinburgh) any Saturday evening you like to name. I will then tell you the judges and the shows—but come by yourself. I hope you will not disappoint me this time and back out of it. Did you never think it strange yourself for some fancier to lift four or five 1st cards the one Saturday and not get even a commend card the following Saturday, a regular happening throughout the whole show season? I repeat that outside the "clique" their great winnings vanish. I am glad you wrote without so much help last week, also to see your admission that the "clique" is again engaged. That may be so, but I am sure it will not be on so large a scale as in 1912. Suspicion is not resting on the wrong men in this case. As regards the latter part of your letter, it is over ten years ago since I refused judging; for proof of that, one of our oldest and most esteemed judges officiated in my place, namely, Mr. George Arnott. I am still refusing to judge. "Plainhead" is aware that my trade does not suit me so well as does his, to go out judging, although I go sometimes. I prefer exhibiting to judging. I am glad to see "Even Mark" has put his name to his letter; it will speak volumes to the Fancy. Winners at 2s. a head is a fact. The novice who sold his stock to a so-called prominent exhibitor got a shock when they came home with 1st prizes to their new owner. The poor novice could not get a commend. Such is our present day Fancy. I hope "Plainhead" will have a better breeding season this year than he had in 1912, and trust he will meet me in Edinburgh. We can be friends for one night, and I will give him my word that the result will not be put on paper by me.

Lavender as an Attraction for Red Mites.

Sir,—As I am a reader of Cage Birds, I would like to tell you of the best red mite trap ever known, that is, to my knowledge. A fancier living close to me had a Canary pestered with them, and tried everything he could think of. His wife bought a pennyworth of lavender at the house door, and happened to put it on the top of the bird's cage. On taking it down the paper was found to be full of red mites. So my friend continued with it, and he has got his bird clear of these pests.

The Seed and Water Supplies in an Aviary.

Sir,—I was pleased to read Mr. Allison's letter in your last issue with reference to the method he had for years adopted with much success. The same idea occurred to me some time since (the use of a large flower-pot saucer) and for want of something better I decided to try it. In agreement with Mr. Allison, I have myself found this simple method extremely satisfactory, not only from the point of view of avoiding waste, but of cleanliness—an equally important consideration. Instead of a flower-pot for a stand I have suspended my saucers on an iron hoop 18 inches above the ground. On the opposite side of the aviary I have duplicated the arrangement, the saucer in this case being half-filled with water, which I have found makes an ideal bath, both the side and bottom of the saucer affording a good grip for the birds. Originally I used a large porcelain developing dish, but as the birds could not "feel" the bottom, owing to its polished surface, I discarded this. All it needs to keep these saucers scrupulously clean, is a scrub each morning, the operation occupying only a few minutes.

A Vexed Point at Our Shows.

The Half Prize-money Rule.

Sir,—I should like to answer Mr. Bareham. First, my letter clearly stated I was fully aware of the amount of work and anxiety a show is to the officials. With the next portion of his letter I quite agree, but when it comes to the entry fees having to pay all expenses, owing to the climatic conditions on the show day, my opinions differ, for enthusiasts are not stopped by weather. No doubt a great many do not attend, but on whom does the gate depend? Fanciers for the greater part, with a few who visit a show now and again as a change—something new to them. In reading show reports one not infrequently finds classes of 18 to 30 entries, and one in my mind this season contained 61, and the reporter remarked they might have made two classes of it, yellow and buffs. With regard to "bought wit," etc., I think the fancier who obtains his without purchasing is extremely fortunate; at any rate mine has cost me a good amount of money and time, as one rarely finds an exhibitor who has not been sharped at one time or other. But I must pay tribute to our friend, C.B., from whom one can learn a great deal at so small a cost. The issue in which my letter appeared is not handy, but I'm quite sure it did not contain the statement that I could not stand half prize money (which Mr. Bareham credits me with). It said that I should like to see a little more given to 6 and 7 entries, and the schedule mentioned by Mr. J. Locke contains practically the same prizes as suggested by me. Mr. Bareham says without shows we should get no fancy prices for birds. Quite so; this to my mind is just where big exhibitors have the pull over us younger ones, as they can command and get big prices by their prize list, etc. But such as myself can't make anything like the money of our stuff that they can, although we may offer better value. Often when a novice buys a bird from a big exhibitor who advertises it as a winner at such and such a show, does he get the bird that won, and how is one to tell if he did not go to the show? In conclusion, let me say profit by exhibiting is not expected by me, but as my letter implied: Working fanciers must have money with their prize cards or cease exhibiting.

Young Exhibitor.

Sir,—Mr. J. Andrews stands alone in inciting exhibitors to boycott societies who pay only half prize-money up to 7 entries, and I hope he will stand alone. Mr. Bareham has put the case very fairly, but I believe he has under-estimated some of the costs. He says 30s. to £2 for a hall. We paid a few years ago about £6 (my society is, I may say, a mixed society). Postage, as a rule, runs up to £5 with us, advertising nearly another £5, for I do not believe in cutting expenses down in the advertising department. Pens in a mixed society are a [illegible] item, running from £7 to £10; judges £5, and several other expenses. All these have to come out of the members' annual subscription, gate money and sale of catalogues. Exhibitors get the benefit, not only in the prize money, but in the sale of birds. The risk? The whole risk lies with the members of the society running the show. Are not exhibitors prepared to sacrifice a little? Societies do not run shows for the money they make out of them. If the show turns out a failure, members who have paid annual subscription, entry fees if they have exhibited, perhaps given a special or guaranteed a class, now have to pay over a certain amount to pay off the deficiency of the late show. Very encouraging, is it not, Mr. Andrews and "Young Exhibitor," after having worked hard and lost time over trying to make the show a success? We are, therefore, simply asking you to accept half-prize-money up to 7 entries. We are giving you the prize cards, and are paying three exhibitors instead of two—a third prize winner gets 2s. 6d. (instead of nothing, as in the case of withholding prizes) and the 1st prize winner gets 5s., the same as he would get if 1st prize was withheld, but gets a 1st prize card instead of 2nd. In four and five entries the society loses 4s., and in six and seven entries the society gains 2s. On eight entries the society loses 5s. 6d., on nine they lose 4s., on ten 2s. 6d., on eleven 1s., and on twelve entries they make 6d. So, with the exception of the six and seven entries, they must have twelve entries to make the class pay—not often the case in any show. I stated in my last letter (or at any rate, I meant to) that the majority of exhibitors do not show for what they make out of it—that is the prize-money—they depend more on the after results of sales, etc., owing to the winnings. I had several letters sent to me this year after one show, in which we only gave half prize-money for four to seven entries, saying the writers were satisfied, and as long as it was in the schedule they did not object. Give the societies good entries, and that will overcome the half prize-money. Societies to-day do not want to make money on their show, but they want to clear liabilities.

Foot Trouble in Soft-bill Birds.

A Few Very Helpful "Tips."

Sir,—In answer to your correspondent, "Young Beginner," the principal cause of foot trouble is injudicious feeding, and I would advise a change of diet. Frequently the trouble is brought about by feeding on too many mealworms. Mealworms overheat the bird's system, and seem to drive the blood into the feet. I always, in addition to bran and flour, feed my mealworms on a little scraped or grated raw carrot, which makes the worms plump and juicy, if I may say so, and by giving same sparingly, say six a day to a bird in song, I am never troubled with foot ailments. But it is not the worms alone that will cause the trouble—your birds should have a chance to take a bath whenever they like, and the cage-bottom be covered with soft material, slightly damped, such as leaf-mould, cocoa-nut fibre, or fine soil from the garden, and the perch that the bird mostly uses be covered with rubber tubing to make it more elastic. Once a bird is seriously affected with "corns," or swollen feet, the cure is by no means an easy one. I would advise to bathe the feet once a day in warm soda water (not the mineral water, but boiled water in which soda has been dissolved) cleanse same carefully with a small soft brush, then dry them between linen and dust with flour—or if sores, paint same, after washing, with arnica, and then anoint with vaseline or hazeline. I trust that this may assist "Young Beginner" in effecting a cure

The Opinion of a Noted Fancier—
"It makes Bird Breeding Easy."

THE STOCK BOOK

Compiled by G. E. WESTON.

Simplifies the operations in the Bird-room and makes it possible for every-one, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. It affords facilities for the recording of the complete pedigree of all your birds; of your experiences during the season; an account of every bird reared. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character; Cash and Profit and Loss Accounts for the year. Gives valuable hints for times of emergency during the breeding season.

"Receiving so many offers last week for my Norwich birds, I could not answer them all. Wish your paper every success."—J. KIRKPATRICK (Carlisle).

"I shall be obliged if you will thank all those who answered my advertisement re two Buff Hens, as I have had so many replies I really couldn't answer them all. These were the last of my stock, and I may say I have done well this year through advertising in CAGE BIRDS."—ROBERT NEIL (Barrhead).

"If I only get half as many replies as I had from the last I shall not do badly."—F. J. WHIBLEY (Maidstone).

"The two advts. I inserted in your last issue of CAGE BIRDS brought me over three dozen enquiries and birds were sent away Monday morning, which speaks volumes for the advertising value of CAGE BIRDS. Kindly thank all who applied for Bullfinches, as I had so many applications I could not answer them all."—A. JUNOR (Tomatin).

"Orders are still coming in from all parts in answer to my advertisements in CAGE BIRDS of March 15th and 29th. I advertised in another weekly on the 22nd, but did not get a solitary reply. I look forward at mid-day every Friday for my copy of your valuable paper, and wish CAGE BIRDS the success it deserves."—C. EVANS (Aberstwyth).

"Kindly thank the numerous applicants for my birds, through your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS. I have found your paper a great help, as I could have disposed of double what I had." T. HALLIDAY (Lauder).

"Kindly thank, through CAGE BIRDS' columns, all those who answered my advert re Hawfinch and Goldies, as they were far too numerous to reply personally, except those who sent stamp."—W. G. COOPER (Carisbrooke).

"Kindly thank all who answered my advert. re Canaries in your issue dated March 8th, as it is impossible to reply to all singly."—R. WALTER (Bulwell).

"Kindly thank all those applicants, through CAGE BIRDS, for Norwich Hens and Goldfinch Mule, all being disposed of. They had all gone by the Saturday morning. Wishing continued success. I wish to thank, through your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, all those who have replied to my advert. I have had so many orders that I cannot very well reply to them individually."—WM. ROTHERY (Batbury).

"Please thank all those who replied to my advert in CAGE BIRDS. I answered all those who enclosed stamp, but could not answer the others, as there were so many. This speaks well for CAGE BIRDS as an advertising medium."—J. COLLING (Filey).

"The Bullfinches I advertised last week in CAGE BIRDS are all sold. Please mention this, or it will cost all I made of them in returning postal orders."—JAS. THOMAS (Bugle).

"I am more than satisfied with results of advertising in CAGE BIRDS. I sent over 60 Double Breeders on Saturday, April 5th, which speaks well for your valuable paper."—W. KIFFIN (Birmingham).

"Kindly inform the 50-odd applicants for my Magpie that I have parted with him. I had no idea there were so many fanciers requiring Magpies. It is impossible to reply to all of them individually."—C. PEARCE (Abingdon).

—THERE'S BUSINESS FOR ALL IN THE HOBBY.—

The Liverpool Fanciers Cycle Club.

Sir,—The above club is going strong. The April runs opened well, what with sunshine and good musters. Last Sunday eleven of the boys took a 40-mile spin, starting from headquarters—Metcalfe's Brunswick Road, at 2.30 p.m., when we wended our way via Broadgreen on to Tarbuck, thence on to the Warrington terminus. The first halt was made at "Ye Old Black Horse," where we indulged in a good repast, and after the inner-man had been satisfied, we were kept in roars of laughter listening to Billy Woods relating some grand stories of his past. We started for home via the Warrington Road, through Rainhill and Prescot, and someone suggested a halt at Judge Welling's, but that was rescinded, because someone said Alf. was a teetotaller, and would have nothing in. So we made for home through Knotty Ash and Old Swan, and arrived home all in the pink, declaring it to be the best run yet. The boys are contemplating a cycle race from Liverpool to the Palace for the next Palace show, but I think that will be rescinded also. Next Sunday, April 20, we intend to pay a flying visit around Farnworth, Widnes, and Runcorn, and return home via Chester; while passing through Widnes we intend to give the Widnes Fanciers a call. Messrs. Jenkins, Hayes, Abbott, Barker, and Bluer, will be delighted to see the Liverpool boys. Messrs. Parsons and Draper will pilot the fast section to Chester, via Manchester, Altringham, and Northwick, when they will pick up the slow section on the main Northwich road. Then we will all ride to Chester via Delamere Forest, Kelsel, and Stanbridge. The fast section meet at headquarters at 9.30 a.m., the slow section 2.30 p.m., Sunday, April 20. All members must carry a lamp on this red-letter outing. Now, fanciers, give us your support for this auspicious run.

New Society for Dumfries and District.

Sir,—A society under the name of the South of Scotland Cage Birds Association has been formed in Dumfries; over thirty members have already joined. Dumfries and District, having many fanciers, this society supplies a long felt want. A show is to be held sometime in November. The Hon. President is Mr. Robt. Pattie, Buccleuch Street, and the acting president, Mr. J. Edgar, a well-known exhibitor of Scotch Fanciers. The committee being all enthusiastic bird fanciers, the show should have every prospect of being a great success. The society is open to Dumfries, Wigtown, and Kirkeudbrightshire For membership, apply to.

The R.S.P.C.A. and the Hobby of Bird Keeping.

Treading the Easy Path.

Sir,—I note the correspondence in Cage Birds this week. It would be far more to the credit of the R.S.P.C.A. if it turned its attention to cases of real cruelty, such as occurred in Liverpool here the other Friday afternoon, when twenty-two horses were started at break neck fences, only three out of the 22 surviving to the end, one of these having been remounted after falling. Driving these exhausted animals over impossible jumps is "Sport," and a rich man's hobby, the pastime of our "great nobility," so it must not be touched by the zealous R.S.P.C.A. The working man's little hobby is safer prey for such societies. The people who support this cruelty to horses send their subscriptions to the R.S.P.C.A. making it possible for it to harass the poor man hobbyist. It is the old story over again, one law for the rich, and another for the poor. There is a far greater field for the attention of the R.S.P.C.A. on the playgrounds of the lazy rich. Why shut their eyes to the blood-thirsty carnage of pheasant shooting, and the sending a pack of hounds at a tame stag, hare, and fox-hunting, etc., but I fear it is useless to try and direct their notice to these forms of cruelty, there is too much influence and money behind such. The poor man's hobby is easier prey. The rich man may drive a noble creature like a horse or a stag to a cruel death, but the poor man must not keep a bird in a cage, although the bird may be showing every proof of health and contentment. It is time that we, as bird-keepers, made a greater protest against this unnecessary and fussy interference on the part of inspectors who are often ignorant as far as birds are concerned. There is plenty of real cruelty going on around us if they would only turn their attention to it, but I fear they will shirk the bigger task, and continue their efforts where the ground is safer.

Liverpool. J. W. Cutmore.

Sir,—In last week's Cage Birds I notice a letter from the chief secretary of the R.S.P.C.A., in which he refers to certain of my criticisms in connection with the work of that Society. In the first place I must tell him, as I thought he and all your readers very plainly understood, that my remarks only referred to the Society's work in connection with birds, and if there was any doubt in the matter my letter in your journal of March 23rd certainly places the issue beyond question. In his letter he makes no attempt to answer what I asked of the Countess von Hahn as to how many cautions they had given London bird dealers before commencing proceedings. Instead of giving us the particulars for which I asked he simply goes back to that basis of figures referring to the whole year's work of the Society, as quoted by Countess von Hahn, 20,659 cautions against 6,906 convictions. I notice no record is given of cases where proceedings were taken and no convictions obtained. Now will he kindly give us a plain, straightforward business answer to my letter. It is very simple and will not take long. How many cautions were given to London bird dealers, say, within 12 miles of Charing Cross, previous to taking proceedings during the last two or three years? I presume he has no objection to give me privately the names and addresses so that I can verify them. Another very important question I should like to see Mr. Fairholme answer. When and by whom was it suggested that keeping wild birds in cages is cruelty? Did the subscribers and supporters of the R.S.P.C.A. suggest it, or did the officials suggest it to the subscribers and supporters? If cases in which convictions have been obtained were anything like those which have been taken up and successfully defended, it certainly reflects no credit on their method of conducting prosecutions. It clearly shows, as Mr. Hopkins pointed out to the Lambeth Police Court, that it is not cruelty they are prosecuting, but they are seeking to uphold a fad of their own. Some of their convictions are not a conviction for cruelty, but for offences against the Bird Laws. What right have they to take up and institute proceedings for offences in the close season? It is entirely outside their province, and nothing whatever to do with cruelty to animals. I am pleased and grateful for the figures quoted by the Secretary of Cage Birds League that only one in 239 of their convictions refers to birds, and were these reduced down again to actual cases of cruelty, as sensible persons understand such a word, the results would be more surprising still. When their convictions are analysed we see clearly what little cruelty there is to complain of in the bird world. Again, we have the record of the Police, a very keen class of men in all cases of cruelty. How is it that their prosecutions for offences against birds are practically nil? Wild things were subjected to confinement, we might say, before Noah's Ark or else when they got inside there would have been a row. The whole of our useful and domestic animals, etc., in the shape of horses, cows, sheep, goats, cats, dogs, pigeons, poultry, rabbits, etc., have descended down to us from being in their original state wild things. These have been subjected to confinement, and the outcome we see to-day. You have this very aptly illustrated in the Canary, in which we are all so interested. Now cruelty to animals, as defined by the various Acts of Parliament, is doing something which causes an animal bodily pain and suffering, not the fact of simply keeping it in confinement, and treating it with every care and attention till it becomes a pet. If the act of keeping wild birds in cages is cruel, then the same must be said of all wild things in confinement. In such case, why does not the R.S.P.C.A. ask the Zoological Societies to return to their native haunts all those specimens of wild things which are confined in cages and various enclosures in the gardens? Certainly the R.S.P.C.A. would never dream of doing this, and I am sure all persons of any pretensions to common sense will share the conviction that there is no more harm in keeping a wild bird in a cage than in keeping all those zoological specimens at the various Zoo's. As I have previously mentioned, this Society was founded, and is supported, to prevent cruelty that can be properly dealt with by the various laws made for that purpose. Will they confine themselves to that particular purpose and not interfere with a hobby which is centuries old, and which is patronised from our King and Queen down to the humblest subject in the land. Walk through our country lanes where you may hear the beautiful song of the British bird, and even there you come across the cottager who likes his pet bird in a cage. I trust the day is far distant when we can cease to teach our children love, respect, good nature, care, and kindness through the medium of our domestic pets, especially the cage bird. In conclusion I would ask every bird-keeper to-day, and whenever there is a local meeting of the R.S.P.C.A., to attend that meeting, make himself heard, and help to refute that part of their propaganda which preaches that it is cruel to keep wild birds in cages. Our campaign must be when and wherever possible to refute these ideas; hitherto they have had all the talking, let the bird-keeper do a little in defence of his hobby.

T. R. Trower.

The Damage done by Larks.

Sir,—In the letter of the Chief Secretary of the R.S.P.C.A. I notice his remarks that the society is against the capturing of wild birds. Might I ask Mr. Fairholme through your columns what he proposes to do with the surplus British birds? Everyone who has studied bird life is aware of the prolific nature of the Skylark, one of the earliest and latest to breed. I have often seen nests of young very early and very late in the season, and, considering how many Larks are caught for food purposes, it is astounding how numerous they are. Only a few weeks ago I was watching a flock of from 300 to 500 making a raid on a farmer's crop of young wheat. These birds visited this particular crop four or five times while I was there, and I could see them running up and down the rows of wheat tearing up and devouring the grain and the young shoots. I got quite near to them, and as I had a powerful pair of field glasses I could see quite plainly what they were doing—any amount of damage. What would happen were these birds left unmolested for a few seasons? Nothing but a wholesale slaughter of same would then place them on their proper level, and that after they had done an immense amount of damage. How annoying it must be to a farmer after the trouble and expense of planting a field of wheat to see a large flock of these birds day after day depriving him of the benefit of his labours. No one would deplore the wholesale destruction of our beautiful Skylarks more than myself, but it is quite certain they must be kept within proper bounds, and I should very much like to hear what the R.S.P.C.A. proposes to do with them if they object to their being caught.

A Lover of Birds.

A Little Explanation.

Sir,—If Mr. Fairholme is under the impression that I doubt the veracity of his inspectors, can it be wondered at after what the two London magistrates, Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Chapman, said? In my letter of March 1st I spoke of Moxey as the Inspector of the Society for the Protection of Wild Birds, so it was only a slip of the pen that is of no consequence to the subject at issue. Will Mr. Fairholme kindly let us know where and when his society, the R.S.P.C.A., has ever cautioned if Mr. Polhill has considered there was evidence enough to get a conviction?

T. Pearson.

Monthly meeting, held headquarters, April 5th, Mr. T. Baldwinson in the chair; usual business transacted, which included enrolling two new members in Messrs. R. Haigh and Rowe. The chief item of the evening followed, viz., lecture on "Breeding and Rearing," by that respected fancier, Mr. H. J. Chittenden (Bradford), who dealt with his subject in a masterly manner.

In his opening remarks, the lecturer said the first and most important item to bring success was cleanliness. Everything in the bird-room must be subjected to a thorough overhauling, to eradicate, if possible, that pest, the red mite. No fancier could ever hope for success unless such be done previous to pairing up. He advocated plain boards for breeding cages, as they were much easier to keep clean. If breeding Yorkshires, the best and surest way to form a stud was to purchase a quarter-bred Belgian cock and pair him to a hen which is a fourth cross from Lancashires. In selecting, pick out a medium-sized hen, taking care that she excels in quality of feather, with a nice round head; this is a very important point, as nothing looks worse on an otherwise perfect specimen than a bad head. He had noticed this failing was prevalent in many of our present-day winners, and of late years seemed to be getting more common.

Do not on any account breed with a hinge-tailed bird; see that same is carried straight with the barrel. I have proved by long experience that it is impossible to breed this fault out once you have introduced it into your stock. Size on the cock side is an essential point. You cannot have your stock cocks too large, even if you have to sacrifice quality to get it, as a hen I have described will counterbalance this defect, they having more dominating power in this respect. See that he possesses a good full neck, eschewing hollowness. The progeny from such a pair will breed you something that will repay you for the time, trouble and expense involved. One great asset they are sure to possess, viz., that lovely salmon tint that makes a Yorkie so taking to the eye.

I am no believer in early breeding. By avoiding this you take less risk, such as hens being starved off the nest, and in some cases losing a valuable young hen during the trying ordeal of laying her first egg under adverse climatic conditions. Points in favour of a late start are, more likelihood of full eggs; also when young are hatched, the parents can feed them earlier in the morning and later in the evening, thereby minimising having weak, straggly youngsters in the nest. It is common knowledge that birds are made in the nest, so it behoves us all to help the parent birds by being systematical, doing the proper thing at the proper time, and looking after every little detail.

Is Lettuce a Dangerous Green-food?

See that the cocks are in vigorous, healthy condition previous to pairing, by giving a little egg food and pinch of mixed seed occasionally. The hens will come on in due course, some very rapidly if paired to a cock that is constantly singing lustily. If my birds agree they remain together all the season. By letting them stay together you lighten the hen's task, especially if she hatches out four, five or six, as is sometimes the case. After the third day give plenty of green food. For my own use I prefer dandelion, but until this is in season, watercress is used. I strongly condemn the use of lettuce, it being to my mind too full of laudanum, which makes birds mopy and listless, a thing to be avoided. Do not forget to give plenty of mixed seed. When young are about three weeks old, separate from parents. You will find they get on much better. Give plenty of baths, and hang on the show cage for them to get used to. A bird well trained in its nest feather possesses what is required in all show specimens.

If any of you are troubled with young having inflammation, paint the abdomen with a mixture of two parts olive oil and one part turpentine, and put on milk sop. The lecturer here intimated that he would be pleased to answer any question. Needless to say, his kind offer was eagerly accepted by several fanciers present. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Chittenden, who thanked the members in return, closing a very enjoyable evening.—W. A. Wilson, Hon. Sec.

SOME POINTS ABOUT THE ROLLER CANARY AND ITS SONG.

The Roller section of the Burslem C.B.S. held a special meeting on the evening of the 10th inst., at the Barnfields Hotel, Burslem. Mr. Tomlinson, Newcastle, was present to describe the song tours of the birds members had brought for the occasion. Previous to commencing the naming of the tours he impressed on the minds of the company that with the advent of the spring and summer months many birds will get rank in song, and pitch the tone of their voices above the normal, often bringing out a prolonged tour, and then breaking off the song, while others would bring short wild bursts of song. A bird in this condition would bring a tour that would be classed as a bell roll, yet in the bird's normal tone, and normal bodily condition the tour would in all probability be a hollow roll. The same could be applied to the schockel and flutes, the former delivered in a high key (he opined) would be a bell tour, and flute notes are often brought high. Further, some birds which sang a hollow roll would at this time of the year ignore it, and play on a bell roll. An illustration of this was afterwards pointed out in a bird that just touched on its true and deep hollow roll, after playing at some length on a nice toned bell roll. So the company would understand that to judge the value of a bird's tours at this time of the year would be unfair both to the bird and to its owner. There was a very good muster of fanciers present, some in other branches of the Canary hobby, and a very enjoyable evening was spent, which left only the desire to advance, and that all would become Roller fanciers in the very near future. Amongst the questions asked, and answered were:.

Eradicating a Fault.

Do you recommend inbreeding to eradicate a high bell tour, using a low toned St. Andreasburg Roller as a schoolmaster?

No, I do not. At the first cross you would fix the fault more fully in the blood, but I believe the desired result could be obtained by careful selection, and breeding only with those birds whose fault was the least prominent. The quickest, and what I should certainly describe as the easiest method, would be to cross into blood that was free from this fault. Neither do I recommend a St. Andreasburg Roller to act as a tutor for our contest birds, for the bird we know as a St. Andreasburg has quite a different style of song, and results would be unsatisfactory.

Up to what age will a bird fertilise eggs? I ask this question because I have had youngsters from a sixteen-year-old cock.

Had you bred with this bird previous to its attaining this age? No.

A hard and fast age limit cannot be placed upon a bird as to its breeding abilities.

Do you feed all the year round on a mixture of German rape, and canary seed?

I find my birds do better on this diet. If I use all rape seed, they seem to become run down, and get in a poor condition.

Do you think that a bird will sing all the tours that are bred in it, without the aid of a tutor?

No, a bird would sing a portion of its song, yet this would not be so perfect as would be the case had the bird been placed under tuition.

Learning all the Tours.

Do you believe a bird would learn to sing all the different tours by tuition?

No. As an illustration of my assertion, I have a bird here that cannot sing a decent hollow roll, although it has been since its birth amongst birds that sing a good hollow roll.

Of course there are exceptions in all cases?

I will grant you that, and will give other instances to show that it is not an exceptional case. I have at home another cock that is bred from a strain that is fairly good in the hollow roll. Again, I have another young cock that cannot sing a water Glucke, he brings an extra bass tour in the place of his water Glucke, this bird has also been under water Glucke singers from its birth. Again, I had twenty young water Glucke bred cocks in school, and one of their tutors was a Glucke singer. In the result only one bird learned to sing the Glucke tour, and then no reliance could be placed on the bird bringing it in his song.

Does a bird have to be Glucke bred to be a Glucke singer?

No. The best deep hollow Glucke singer I have heard was a hollow roll strain bird. It had learned the tour through being in the company of other Glucke singers. Yet this bird did not breed a bird that would or could sing a Glucke tour It is rather a fine point is this Glucke bred, and Glucke singer; a bird can be bred from Glucke parents, yet not be a Glucke singer, again it can be a Glucke singer and not be Glucke bred.

Are there any Glucke singers here to-night?

I cannot tell until I have heard them sing. Up to the present the Glucke tour has not been sung. The best description I can give you of a Glucke tour is a deep sounding Glucke—Glucke—Glucke—Glucke, with a distinct break between each note.

VALE OF LEVEN C.B.C.

Annual show of Mules, Hybrids, British, and Foreign was held in Village Schoolroom, Alexandria, April 8. There was a large entry, and the quality passed anything seen in the Vale. Vice-president Gillies had charge of the arrangements, which were well carried out. A Goldfinch-Bullfinch Hybrid, belonging to Mr. A. H. M'Lean, received the prize for best exhibit. The turnout of visitors was good, and speaks for the popularity the club has attained. Messrs. J. McEwan, Bonhill, and J. Keir, Dumbarton, judged, and their awards were well received.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

A grand table show of British birds was held at the Crown Hotel, Hill Street, Birmingham, April 2. The average of birds shown was extremely satisfactory, and some very fine specimens were on view. All the members must be congratulated on bringing out their birds. Specials given by members for muling pairs were won by Mr. G. H. Day, two British Finches, and Mr. T. Jones, silver medal, Canary and Finch. Mr. Tonks, Wednesbury, kindly judged, and his decisions gave very little room for comment.

After judging, and members had looked over the birds, the business for the evening was gone through, Mr. A. Broadhurst in the chair. All new members proposed at the last meeting were elected. Three new members were proposed, again showing that the old society is still forging ahead, Messrs. W. Sheeley, Moseley, and A. Ward. It was proposed that at the next meeting a lecture should be given on the Roller (Roller fanciers please note). Mr. J. Jeffreys, Birmingham, the Nightingale expert, then gave his lecture on British Softbills. All the members and their friends, of which there was a good attendance, gave him the strictest attention through his instructive address. A hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Jeffreys. Mr. Tonks, in acknowledging a vote of thanks, said he looked upon it as a great honour to be asked to come and judge at the table show of such a strong and powerful society as the City of Birmingham C.B.S., and he was only too pleased to do what he could in the interests of the Fancy in the Midlands.—J. H. Jackson, Sec., per R. Tipper.

SELBY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held in the Museum Hall, April 11th, Mr. J. H. Dixon in the chair. Decided to hold First Feather show, June 13, and the annual Open Show November 13. Sec. was instructed to guarantee advt. in CAGE BIRDS for the open show. Two new members were elected. Prospective members should join at once, and they will be open to compete at the coming First Feather Show. Now fanciers send me your name and address, or attend the next meeting, May 9, in the Museum Hall, at 7.30. Subscription 2s. 6d.—H. Mathers, Sec., 46, Olympia Cottages, Selby.

LOCHGELLY C.B.A.

Meeting held April 12th, in "Bay Horse Tavern." Mr. Jas. Steel, Dalkeith, being introduced, was called upon to deliver lecture on "British Birds." The chief species treated were the Goldfinch, Greenfinch, Linnet, Yellowhammer and other Bunting species, and nearly all of the Thrush tribe. Mr. Steel is a most able lecturer, and kept the members up to the highest pitch of enthusiasm by his pointed witticisms. Many questions were tabled, and he most ably dealt with them, his replies being straight and to the point. After the lecture songs were sung by Messrs. Scott, Harris, and Muir. The meeting closed at 10 o'clock, being voted by all as most enjoyable.—R. Muir, Sec.

WEST OF SCOTLAND O.S.

Monthly meeting held April 5, in Nelson's Temperance Hotel, Mr. Jno. Montgomery presiding over a good attendance. Replies from the various judges having been read, appointments were confirmed, and are as follows: Crests and Plainheads, Mr. Jno. McLay; Borders and Yorks., Mr. G. Hyslop; British and Foreign, Mr. M. Craig. The meeting then had a "hat night," and many and varied were the questions put relating to the Fancy. These led to an exchange of opinions by the members present. Decided to have a lecture on the Norwich Plainhead for next meeting. A vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the meeting. Messrs. R. Heggie, R. Watson, Wm. Griffiths, and T. D. Patterson were elected members.—Wm. Hutchinson, Sec.

GATESHEAD & DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held April 9th, Chairman Mr. Alf. Holden presiding over a good attendance. Letter was read from the secretaries of the Hartlepool C.B.S. of a resolution of sympathy on our recent trouble, also enclosing a donation of 9s. 10d. towards the loss which our late show sustained from their members. I was instructed to write and thank them. Mr. Peel resigned his membership. We decided to have an egg-food-making demonstration at our next meeting, specially got up for the novice members, and the following gentlemen were asked to give same, viz.: Messrs. Tindale, Scott, Holden, Mather, Wellsbury, and Curry. So novice members, turn up in good numbers and show your appreciation. Time allowed each member will be five minutes; any other member who would like to join can do so. Decided to have next feather show, date to be fixed later, when the classes and judges will be fixed. Mr. J. Mackenzie proposed that the best thanks of the members should be given to Mr. Greason for his past services, and also regretting the anxiety which the police-court proceedings (through our prize-drawing) had caused him and his parents, and Mrs. Greason. This was carried unanimously. Mr. Greason suitably replied by saying that he still intended taking an active part in the society. Applause greeted his reply. I was also instructed to write to the Fancy papers re the handsome donation towards our financial liabilities, and also for opening their columns to receive subscriptions for same. Will members please note Mr. Goodman's offer re his noted "Filup Young Bird Feeders." He is willing to supply our members with one each, cost of same 1s. 3d., during the next fortnight, money to go towards the funds of the society. I have already got orders for 15, and any member who would like one should send at once, enclosing postal order, and I will send their names to Mr. Goodman, so the same can be dispatched without delay. Fanciers will be pleased to hear that soon we expect to get over our troubles, and our show will still be held on December 12 and 13, which, as fanciers come from far and near to see, without doubt is the Palace of the North. Our next show will be the 14th, held by Gateshead and District C.B.S. New members elected: Messrs. Fleck (Wallsend), Churnside (Newcastle), and Lindsay (Birtley). I will be pleased to send further particulars to any fanciers who would like to join. Entrance fee 1s., annual subs. 2s. 6d. Please note change of secretary—W. Curry, 60, Grosvenor Gardens, Newcastle.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Meeting held April 14th, at headquarters, 60, Paddington Street, W. Forty-six members, including four lady members, were present to take part in the interesting programme provided. Our Hon. Secretary is full of surprises, and as a novelty for this evening he had sent out tickets with the meeting notices, asking each member to write down his estimate of the number present at a certain time and hand up his ticket on entering the room. A very handsome iced cake, embellished with nests of eggs, fluffy young birds, and a bird sitting on nest in centre, with C. and S.C.B.A., 1913, was the prize for the member guessing the number or nearest to it. The cake was presented by an anonymous donor, to whom the Society are deeply indebted for such a generous gift. The Chairman, Mr. W. A. Shepherd, was unfortunately prevented by illness from attending, and Mr. F. Knight, the Vice-chairman, being away in the country on business, Mr. C. Prior was unanimously elected to the chair. Mr. J. Taylor and Miss Jessie Lowe were nominated for membership. A very hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Miss Jolliffe for a donation of volume of "Canaries, Hybrids and British Birds," to be given as a special prize. The winners of the egg food competition were then announced, the gold medal being won by Mrs. L. M. Thynne, 139 points; silver medal, Mr. W. Knight, 125 points; bronze medal, Mr. W. Sanders, 114 points; the six boxes of confectionery being awarded to Messrs. Brumbridge, Monger, Lloyd, Kelly, Eaton and Offord. Mr. Chard, delegate to London Federation, reported proceedings at their last meeting, and announced that Mr. Knight had been elected Hon. Secretary, and that all books and papers had been handed over. He also mentioned that outstanding prize money for the annual show would be settled very shortly. The Hon. Sec. presented the balance sheet for the pair show, which unfortunately resulted in a small loss, and also the quarterly balance sheet, showing a balance of £7 10s. 11½d. He also announced that owing to the state of the finances he proposed with the consent of the members to organise a concert in October next for the benefit of the Society. The Secretary of the Institute had promised the use of the large hall, and Miss Gracie Shepherd had kindly offered to arrange the programme. The Chairman then introduced Mr. G. E. Weston, who gave a lecture entitled "Some things I don't believe." His opening remarks were fully believed by his audience, as he said he should like very much to have had that nice cake—even better, in fact, than having to deliver a lecture! Then followed valuable hints on the ventilation of bird rooms, the breeding of Light Mules, quoting the experiences of his own and eminent fanciers, and in conclusion he dealt with the feeding of pairs when breeding, and the feeding of young birds, reading very interesting extracts from a volume published 175 years ago, showing that the same method of feeding that was adopted then was still used at the present time. A very hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Weston for his most instructive and interesting lecture. Mr. Offord, scrutineer, then announced that no member had guessed the correct number, but two had given 45, and two 47. The cake was divided into four, the fortunate winners being Mrs. T. L. Sayer, Messrs. Sanders, Kelly and Styles. The meeting closed at 11 o'clock with vote of thanks to Chairman.—Fred Thynne, Assist. Hon. Sec.

STANLEY (Victoria Club) F. & F.S.

Meeting held at Victoria Club, April 13, Mr. T. Curry in the chair, with a good turn up of members to select judges for annual show, and to hear a lecture on "Red Mite," by Mr. R. Goodchild, which was well received, and several remedies were put forward for the extermination of these pests. It is the intention to have a debate on subjects interesting to the Fancy every meeting night after usual business. Mr. W. Reid was elected to be cage bird judge. Decided to procure some books dealing with the several varieties for the use of the members. We have a lot of novices connected with the society, and we expect to turn out some real good fanciers. We made a collection towards the Gateshead show, and I am very pleased to forward 5s., the sum gathered, towards CAGE BIRDS fund, and we hope the Gateshead Society will soon be all right, both financially and otherwise, as it would be a big loss to the North if this grand show were to fall through.—R. Peart, Sec.

GLASGOW AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

Half-yearly meeting held April 8, in Nelson's Temperance Hotel, Mr. J. F. Park presiding over a large attendance. Secretary stated that he had been successful in again securing the Drill Hall, Greendyke Street, for open show on Nov. 21 and 22. Other correspondence having been dealt with, classification was taken up. It was decided to give two extra variegated Norwich classes, old birds, and one extra class unflighted, Crest and Crestbred remaining as at last show. Decided, to add an even-mark class to Border Fancy section. Yorkshire section was brought into line with demands of Y.C.C. of Scotland, viz., 9 classes. A Yellowhammer and selling class for Britishers were added to British section. Nominations of judges then took place, and if committee are fortunate to secure the gentlemen wanted, intending exhibitors should have every confidence in patronising the show. It was decided to apply to all the specialist clubs for their patronage. A vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the meeting.—Wm. Hutchison.

NORTHERN BRITISH AND F.B.C.

Meeting held March 26. Chairman Mr. C. Pettersson presided over a fair attendance. The first item on the agenda was re Mule cup. Secretary had 17s. 6d. towards same. Decided that the balance be taken from club's income, but put back as soon as further subscriptions came in. I will be pleased to receive further subscriptions towards the cup from those who have not yet promised. Owing to the invoices for the cup and medals not yet being to hand, the balance sheet was left over until the April meeting. Election of officers:—Pres., Mr. W. J. Taylor; vice-pres., Messrs. J. Currah, T. Robson, T. C. Crawhall, W. Nicholson, G. Davidson, J. Shepherd, A. Storey, J. W. Allan, H. B. Wilson, A. C. Young, G. Buck; chair., C. Pettersson; vice-chair., J. Mackenzie; comm., local members; auditors, Messrs. A. C. Young, J. Scott; sec., W. Curry. A notice of motion was laid on the table by W. Curry, the same to be discussed at our next meeting, re putting off our meetings during the summer months. In connection with the meeting, the last of the series of table shows was held. Mr. J. Maddison judged. LINNET: 1, Pettersson. GREENF.: 1, 2, Pettersson. A.O.V. BRIT. HARDBILL: 1, Scott; 2, McGuire. MULE OR HYB. PAIRS: 1, 4, Scott; 2, McGuire; 3, vhc, Pettersson. FOR.: 1, 2, Scott; 3, 4, Pettersson. Mr. W. Curry, Ebchester, was elected a member. On the proposition of J. Mackenzie, a hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Maddison for judging. This brought a pleasant meeting to a close. I will be pleased to hear from anyone in the Northern Counties who would like to join us for the small subscription of 2s. 6d. we give annually 18 medals and 3 silver cups for competition amongst our members. For further particulars apply—W. Curry, Sec., 60, Grosvenor Gardens, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

MARKINCH P., P., AND C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held in Lister Rooms, April 10, Mr. John Thomson, sen., presiding over a very large attendance of committee, when judges were nominated for our open show to be held November 1. Mr. W. Forrester and Mr. A. Mitchel were elected auditors for the ensuing year.—John Lindsay, Sec.

RUNCORN B.B.A.

At headquarters, Mr. Sutton in the chair, before a good attendance of members, Mr Bootes gave a washing exhibition, followed by a novice competition, which was won by Mr. B. Booth, one of our latest recruits. One new member was made, Mr. T. Walker, making a total of 26. Next meeting, May 2nd, to form a club for the next Crystal Palace show. Members please attend.—L. Pone, Sec.

LANCASHIRE C.A.

Meeting held [illegible], in the Rochdale O.S. Club Rooms. At the passing of balance sheet there were various motions moved, even some in favour of breaking the Society up, on account of the Lancashire fanciers not having taken the same interest in it as in previous seasons. I may say that 1911 was a great success. It was decided that the Sec. call another meeting, to give every member a chance of saying what we shall do; so I hope every member will drop me a few lines in reference to any suggestions he is willing to support at next meeting. Please say where and when you would like the meeting. An early reply from the present and all intending members will greatly oblige.—J. Hampshire, [illegible], Cowper Street, Oldham.

THATTO HEATH AND DIS. O.S.

Monthly meeting held April 7, at Railway Hotel, Mr. A. Ashcroft in the chair. After general business was gone through, Mr. H. H. Bixter was called on to give a paper on "Hints on Cage-making," one which, no doubt, several members benefited by. Mr. Bixter went to a lot of trouble to prepare for this lecture, bringing with him the necessary tackle to make his meaning clear. Our fanciers are pretty keen on the Border Fancy this season, and require a paper regarding them; it would be much appreciated. Classes were fixed for next feather show, the selling classes being cancelled. A vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Bixter for his useful lecture, to which he suitably responded, this bringing to a close a very enjoyable evening.—H. Cuttler, Hon. Sec.

NOTTINGHAM AND NOTTS O.S

Meeting held April 8, at the Mechanics' Institute, R. Rhodes, Esq., in the chair. Correspondence was read that had passed with the Mechanics' Hall committee, with the result that we have taken in the New Hall (which is nearly completed) for our open show, Nov. 14 and 15. The room is admirably adapted in every way, being very lofty, splendidly lighted, and ventilated, but perfectly free from draughts, with spacious ante-rooms, replete with every modern convenience, and we trust that exhibitors will favour us with a record entry in our new show premises. The following were elected as judges: Messrs. W. Vardy, T. Heath, and Chas. Houlton. Decided to hold a First Feather show on July 12th; Mr. J. Goode was appointed judge. Full points to count in all classes at this show, and points gained to count for specials at open show. Will all members remember this, and that a few points gained at the First Feather show may mean a silver teapot later on.—J. G. Royce, Asst. Hon. Sec.

STOKE-ON-TRENT C.B.A.

Meeting held April 7, Mr. T. Hawley presiding. Previous to the commencement of business, the chairman took the opportunity of congratulating the four members of the society who were exhibiting at the recent Crystal Palace show, and were all successful in gaining money prizes. For the annual young bird show to be held June 21, it was decided to appoint Mr. F. Bate as judge. The same classification as last year was adopted, with the addition of three classes open to local exhibitors, one each for Norwich, Yorks., and Linnets. Entrance fee in members' classes to be 6d., and in open section 1s. per cage. Prize money 6s., 4s., and 2s. in classes over eight entries; if less than nine, prizes on sliding scale. As the breeding season is coming on, it was decided to call meetings for 8.30 p.m. during the next four months. The Chairman expressed much pleasure in announcing that the secretary would present a handsome gold medal to be competed for on same terms as the cups, the members passing a hearty vote of thanks for the gift. The following were elected members: Messrs. N. Leese, Longton, and G. Chadwick, Hanley. I shall have several other nominations at next meeting.—J. Pitchford.

LEYTON C.B.A.

Members and friends of this society spent an enjoyable evening on April 14th, when a dramatic entertainment was given by the St. Barnabas Play Actors. The audience numbered about 180, a large proportion being ladies. Among those present we noticed Mr. and Mrs. Clacke, Mr. B. F. Forse, Mr. A. B Forse, Mr. J. A. Bartlett (chairman), Mrs. Bartlett, Miss Doris Bartlett, Mr. F. Wallace (Vice-Chairman), Mr. Parker (Treas.), Miss Parker, Mr. and Mrs. King and Sons, Mr. and Mrs. Stephens, Mr. and Mrs. Shankley, Mr. and Mrs. March, Mr. and Mrs. Cass, Mr. and Mrs. G. East, Mr. and Mrs. W. East, Mr. and Mrs. Marley, Mr. and Mrs. Jacomb, Miss Forse and friend, Messrs. Fowles, R. East, J. East, Farmer, Dalton, Fox.

The first part of the entertainment consisted of a well selected number of songs, duets, etc., ably rendered by Misses Curd, Rundell and Vincent, Mrs. Raynham, and Messrs. Curd, Grant, Raynham, Smith, Hare, with Miss Eva Phillips as accompanist at the piano. After the musical programme had been completed the St. Barnabas Play Actors, all of whom had already taken part in the concert, gave a comedy in two acts entitled "The Old Story," stage managed by Mr. P. Smith. This was keenly enjoyed by the large audience present, and all agreed that they had spent a very pleasant evening. The proceeds were applied in aid of the funds of the Leyton and Dist. C.B.A.

A Successful Gathering at Edinburgh.

The annual dinner in connection with the Scottish National Cage Bird Society was held in Hamilton's Rooms, Dundas Street, Edinburgh, April 11. Mr. James Winter, President, was in the chair, supported by Mr. Andrew Lawrie, J.P., and Bailie Smith Elliot. The others present were S. Buglass, Geo. Brown, A. Rodger, J. Easter, J. Charlton, John Brown, J. Livingstone (Bathgate), D. Kinlayside, R. Mackay, C. Sykes, J. Sykes, R. Craig, H. Todd, R. Spence, J. Murray, W. R. Finnie, W. Carson, R. Carson, J. Stormont, W. Dods, W. Kerr, J. Kerr, R. Martin, J. Lile, Keith, A. Hynd, Machlan, Matthews, A. Hoyle, D. Brown, Jas. Brown, Stoddart, J. Craig, R. Rodger, M. Charlton.

Mr. Lawrie in giving the toast of the Society, said there was no necessity for one of their honorary Vice-Presidents to "crack up" about the Scottish National C.B.S. It was not an old society, but it was a most wonderful one. When they cast their minds back to 1902 they found, at its infancy, that there were 800 exhibits at their show. He must admit that whatever the promoters of the idea had in their minds at that time it must have shown that they were on the right lines when they could in their first year institute such a show and have 800 entries. (Applause.) In coming downwards through the years that had passed there was no necessity to detail the successes which had attended their efforts. Suffice it to say that at their last show, in 1912, they had over 2,000 entries. There must be something pure and good in a sport or hobby that allied them so strongly to it.

He thought it would add to the popularity of their birds if people knew where to go and purchase a bird and to know that they were only paying the true value for it. If a bird was worth 7s. there should be no cajoling any party to pay 30s. for it. In this connection he thought their Society, with all their enthusiasm, could bring about a method by which the public would know how to proceed to buy the correct birds. With regard to their new varieties and hybrids they were learning every day, and he thought every one of them was striving in healthy rivalry to see if he could find a means whereby he could get more beautiful specimens than existed at present.

How to "Come out on Top."

He hoped that their Society would go on long and prosper, and he did not think for a moment that with such enthusiasm as they must display in bringing these exhibits up to perfection that there was any fear of it going in the retrograde way. They should all strive in friendly rivalry; that was what they lived for, and the man that was beaten should take it in a friendly spirit. (Applause.) He had done his best, and if he continued to do so, and was painstaking enough, there was not much doubt that he would come to the top if he tried hard enough. (Applause.) Their present President had occupied the position now for four years, and they had just elected him for another four. He (Mr. Lawrie) was a member of 14 clubs, and he always found that the "hail fellow well met," the man who was not too prominent, the man who had tact and discretion, and knew what was best for the Association, was always the best man to have at the head of affairs, and just such a man he was sure they had in Mr. Winter, whose name he had much pleasure in coupling with the toast.

The President, replying, said he thought that it was a cause for self-congratulation that they had gone on flourishing in the manner they had done. The fact that they finished up last year with an entry of over 2,000 spoke volumes for the enthusiasm and general good feeling that existed in their ranks. He was especially pleased at the present time at the result of their meetings with the Edinburgh Open Ornithological Society, and that they had practically signed the agreement that they were going to have one amalgamated show at New Year time, and he trusted that the show would be such that it would be often spoken about. He hoped that it would prove to be only for the good of the Fancy at large that this step had been taken. (Applause.) He was sorry that Mr. Allan, of the Edinburgh Open Society was not with them that night, owing to indisposition, as a great deal of credit was due to him for bringing about this happy termination to their differences.

Continuing, the President said it was a proud moment for him when they elected him to be their President. Since they had put him in office he had always endeavoured to do his best to help on the work of the Society. It was all very well for Mr. Lawrie to put the President on a pinnacle but a President was of no avail unless he had a good committee at the back of him, and in this respect he was blessed with one of the best working committees that it was possible for a President to have. He had to thank them for the toast, and for the way they had responded to it.

The Fanciers Troubles and Trials.

Mr. J. G. Easter gave the toast of "The Kindred Societies." In doing so he said there was no gainsaying the fact that the Scottish National Society would not hold the proud position it did if it was not for the kindred societies sending their exhibits to it. When a man bred a bird as a rule he was not satisfied until it had graced the benches of the Scottish National Show. He also referred to the friendly spirit that was abroad at present, especially that existing now between the Edinburgh Open Society and themselves, and he was pleased that the reconciliation had been effected. He coupled the toast with the name of Mr. Kerr, the President of the Edinburgh Open Society.

Mr. J. Kerr, alluding to Mr. Lawrie's reference to healthy rivalry, said that he thought that many of their differences were of such a petty character that they should never have occurred, or, having occurred, should be passed over. Perhaps no sort of sportsman ever encountered so many trials or heartbreaks, or so many real knock-downs as the bird fancier, but he always got over them, and came up smiling again ready to commence any season. He thanked them for the kind reference they had made about his Society, and they would do all they could to make the National Society still better than it had been in the past. He thanked them for the kind reception they had given him.

Mr. R. Craig, in pledging the toast of the "Edinburgh Town Council," said they had nothing but thanks to give to that body. When they started the Society in Picardy Place the hall was so small that people could not move about, and the Town Council came to their aid and gave them at that time free of all charge the use of the Corn Exchange. They were greatly indebted to the Town Council, and he hoped that as long as it was possible they would continue to give it.

Friendly Relations with the Corporation.

Bailie Smith-Elliot, replying on behalf of the Corporation, thanked them for their kind and sympathetic references to the Town Council. With regard to the use of the Corn Exchange granted by the Town Council he hoped they would continue to be there as long as it was vacant and standing, and he understood that it was likely to stand yet for some considerable time. The Town Council were slow to demolish valuable property, and he rather thought the National C.B.S. would get the hall so long as they conducted their show on the lines that they had been in the habit of conducting it. (Applause.) He knew of no better purpose or fitting object than a bird show on a New Year's Day. They had all their hobbies. He had tried cage birds, but he had always killed them with kindness. (Laughter.) He thought there was no finer hobby a man could take up than that of birds. He commended the end and object of the Society, which he said was well worthy of the interest the Town Council took in it in giving them the use of one of the finest halls that they could get for the purpose.

Other toasts were "Our Guests," proposed by Mr. Stormont, replied to by Mr. Lawrie and Bailie Smith-Elliott.

During the evening an excellent programme of music and recitations was carried through, contributed to by Messrs. Matthews, Stormont, Stoddart, Hynds, Charlton and Easter.

Votes of thanks and the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" brought a memorable evening to a close.

OXFORD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting April 3. The first feather show was fixed for July 3. A discussion took place with regard to change of meeting place, and it was decided to call a committee meeting to deal with the question. Members of the committee please take note.—A. F. Fifield, Press Correspondent.

PONTYPRIDD F. AND F.S.

A very successful meeting was held at the Victoria Hotel, April 7, Councillor Daniel Arnott presiding. Judges were selected, Mr. C. A. House taking cage bird section. Ten new members were proposed. It was expected to propose fourteen, but four did not turn up. This is a record of proposals at one meeting in connection with this society. Numbers of members at present 43. We require 50. Fanciers attend next meeting, Saturday, April 19.—A. A. Gordon McLucas, Sec.

BURTON-ON-TRENT C.B.S.

A Night of Questions and Answers.

Monthly meeting held April 1, at the Staffordshire Knot. Mr. Hathaway occupied the chair, a large number of members being present. Table show for British, 14 entries, resulted as follows:—1, Smith, Bullfinch; 2, Smith, Goldfinch; 3, Wood, Greenfinch; vhc, hc, Freer, Chaffinch, Greenfinch; c, Oldham, Greenfinch. Mr. Hathaway judged and gave every satisfaction. The principal item for the evening was questions, the members who drew them giving their methods of dealing with the same:—How would you mate birds to establish a strain? Some considered there was no royal road to success. Novices were advised in the first place to deal with a good breeder who is successful on the show bench, and be sure of getting birds true to type; feather and colour were strongly advocated, green blood being required to bring the same out, and when you have got the birds right, do not be afraid to inbreed. Father to daughter, son to mother, and so on, but it was not advisable to keep it on for a considerable time without introducing fresh blood for stamina. When doing so, be sure and know something of its pedigree. One old member believes a two-year-old cock paired to an unflighted hen produces the best results, typical cocks to be tried with two or three hens, and possibly a winner might be bred from the same. What method do you adopt to wean young birds? Leave the same with parents as long as not interfered with. If so, hang on the nursery cage, and keep on egg food, gradually reducing the same, with crushed hemp and canary seed, until put on colour food; give water as soon as young are taken away from old birds; quite a number of members also give green food. At what age do you put young birds on colour food? At seven to eight weeks old, likely birds to be caged off in twos, also look out for plucking in flights. How would you deal with egg-binding? Several remedies were suggested, among which was to give half a teaspoonful of maw and niger seed mixed, a drop of olive oil warmed and dropped on the vent. One breeder always puts a piece of suet in the wires, saying he was never troubled with egg-binding. Steaming over a jug of hot water only to be used as a last resource. How do you deal with sweating hens? The member who drew this question advocated Epsom salts in the drinking water, give plenty of baths, if they will not bathe spray them, pull the old nest out and put hay in; he had tried the same with considerable success. Do you believe in double buffing or double yellowing? It was considered that if the birds are a good size it is not necessary, but if of medium size and tight in feather it might be tried with success. One member said he could breed plenty without double buffing, because in breeding that way it broadens the feather, and of course the same as a rule are coarse, and he would only double yellow with large birds that are long in feather. What is the best cure for asthma? Many members think there is no cure for this complaint. One member had tried the following recipe for colds with considerable success:—Paregoric Elixir, oxymel of squills, and syrup of poppies, and believed the same might cure asthma.—A. Wood, Hon. Sec.

STRATFORD & E. LONDON F.S.

Meeting, held April 10. Arrangements settled for first monthly evening show, April 24. Specials for all sections; admission free, 7. Everyone welcome, Workman's Hall, Stratford, E. Entries close April 21, to show secretary, W. Maxey. New member: Mr. Malcolm Alexander, Canning Town. List still open for testimonial to W. Maxey; if ever so small, send along to A. E. Baker, Hon. Sec., 123, Capworth Street, Leyton.

BONNYRIGG C.B.S.

Meeting held in the Foresters' Arms, March 29th, Mr. Alex. Jardine, President, in the chair. Decided to have a ramble in company with Loanhead Club to Arniston Estate, on June 28, final arrangements to be left in the hands of Mr. Smart, Sec., Loanhead, and Mr. Starling, Sec., Bonnyrigg. New members admitted: W. Hamilton, and J. Pearson, Musselburgh, W. White, Gorebridge, G. Wright, Bonnyrigg, and J. Purvis, Newtongrange. The Visiting Committee appointed were: Messrs. J. Currie and J. Pearson, Musselburgh; W. Smart, and R. Douglas, Loanhead; R. Fisher and J. Stirling, Bonnyrigg. Judges appointed are: P. Gentleman, Avonbridge, Borders; and D. Holden, Muirkirk, the remainder. The meeting closed with a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman. James Stirling, Sec.

CINNAMON MARKED Y.C.C.

Annual general meeting held April 12, at the Market Tavern, Bradford. In the unavoidable absence of the pres., Mr. A. Brown, Mr. P. Drake (vice-pres.) took the chair. The balance sheet, showing a surplus of £1 13s. 3d., was read by the secretary, and passed. Applicants for patronage were read by sec., and were left over, the sec. being instructed to put notice in Fancy Press, as more applications were wanted before it was decided where our patronage should be given. I should like any society of good standing, who will provide four classes for cinn. marks, to make early application. The following officers were elected:—Pres., M. T. Drake; vice-pres., A. Brown, C. Morrison; sec., R. Garnett; committee, F. Allen, A. Cooper, H. H. Towers, W. Richmond, T. Ogden, D. Thornton, G. Snead, L. Ogden, J. Bailey, J. Hudson, T. Metcalf, O. Atkingson, J. Frith, R. Sutcliff; auditors, R. Halliday, J. Hudson. The formation of a novice competition was left over to the committee meeting. Some slight alterations were made in the rules, and the committee look forward to another successful year.—R. Garnett, Sec.

SOUTH BIRMINGHAM O.S.

Meeting held April 9, at headquarters, Chairman Willmott presiding over the largest gathering since the society was formed, over 40 being present. Messrs. F. West, A. Luckman, H. Moore, and E. White were nominated members, making 68 members on the list. Decided to purchase two silver cups for competition amongst members—one champion and one novice. The general idea of those present was for the champion cup to be won two years, and the novice in one season, at Nest Feather and winter show, with most points, the British members to take part in the champion cup only, and it was agreed to appoint a special committee to consider the best way to create competition for the cups, and submit same to May meeting. Nine members were selected, and the meeting of same will be called for April 23. Any member wishing to give his views should send same in writing to the secretary before that date, so that members will come prepared to hear a sound discussion and pass rules and conditions relating to the cups at the May meeting. Date of Nest Feather shows will be arranged at the May meeting. Specials already promised number over 15. Mr. Kidner promised a good special for competition in British section at both shows. The secretary is again whipping round for promises, and may yet obtain another tea service for competition as per last year's Nest Feather shows. The president will offer a very handsome hand-painted medal to the Yorks. novice section at both shows, under novel rules. After the meeting a table show of British was held. GOLDF. OR BULLF.: 1, sp, Kidner. HAWFINCH: 1, sp, Barnett. A.O.V. HARDBILL: 1, sp, Barnett. The members' competition was keenly contested, the winner being Mr. P. Rees, who placed the birds well ahead of all others on the awards given by Mr. G. H. Russell, who spoke of the exhibits as being the finest for many a long day.—J. Sheppard, Sec.

MANCHESTER AND NORTHERN COUNTIES O.C.

General meeting held at headquarters, Deansgate Temperance Hotel, April 7, when Mr. Raynes presided over a good attendance of members and friends. We did not spend much time over the general business, Mr. T. Harrison being with us to give us a lecture entitled "From Breeding Cage to Show Bench." The varieties he treated upon were Norwich, Yorkshires, and Borders. He told us the kind of birds he would choose to produce show birds. He would see that he had good coloured birds for Norwich, the cock to be marked on the flights, as the larger the green feather the more colour they carry. Take great care with hens—have good ones. He would choose short thick hens, with good heads, shape, and feather, length about 5½ins. Cock, wing-marked, good broad head, good wings and legs, and perfect feet, size about 6¾ins. Yorkshires must have tight feathered, typical hens, loose feathered ones not much use; length about 6½ins. Cocks, good round heads, straight neck, well carried wings, good legs, a bit more wedgy than the hens, length 6¾ins. Borders, both cock and hen to have head small and round, back well filled in, and nicely rounded, breast nicely rounded, but not too big, wings compact and close, position about 45 degrees, fine quality and jaunty carriage. Mr. Harrison then dealt with the feeding, giving us his method from the time the birds were hatched right through the moult, and told us how he fed when they were being exhibited. He mentioned that baths played a prominent part; let the water stand in the room overnight, or, better still, boil the water. Birds would be more able to stand the strain of showing if they had the bath three times a week. After his lecture, Mr. Harrison was asked a number of questions, which he answered to everybody's satisfaction. Time came all too soon, when a hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Harrison for his kindness in giving us such an interesting lecture. Next meeting will be held at headquarters, April 21, when Mr. Cutmore, Liverpool, will give us his lecture, which he was unable to give us owing to business reasons on March 17, entitled "Pedigree Breeding and Heredity," with illustrations. A hearty welcome will be given to fanciers and friends.—H. Booth[illegible], Hon. Sec.

A GRAND SPECIAL ISSUE.

KENT COUNTY C.B.A.

Meeting held at the secretary's house, 36a, Snargate Street, Dover, April 9th, Mr. Raynor chairman, and several committeemen present. Correspondence was read, and general business gone through. Mr. A. Hall, of Plumstead, and Mr. Pilcher, of Deal, were elected members. H. Wood, Hon. Sec.

EDINBURGH NORWICH & M.B.S.

Monthly meeting held at 142, High Street, Edinburgh, April 3rd, with a large turnout of members. The principal item of business was the booking of hens, which turned out very satisfactory. Several alterations were made in the classification form for annual show in November and judges appointed were Messrs. J. Adams (Dundee) and J. W. Bruce (Coldstream). Agreed, to have a young bird show July 5, in Buccleuch St. Hall. Mr. J. Dewar has kindly consented to place the tickets. Also resolved to have a ramble this year, particulars regarding same will be announced later.—J. Stormont, Sec.

KELTY AND BLAIRADAM C.B.A.

Meeting held April 8, Mr. Jas. Stenhouse (Pres.) in the chair. Mr. Ramsay, Tayport, was appointed Scotch Fancy judge for open show. A communication was read from Scottish B.B. and M.C. stating we could not get 10s. patronage money returned, as they thought our entry was worth it. Agreed, that W. Fraser Simpson get show printing. The Sec. of West Fife League gave a report of their last meeting, stating that our Association had to appoint a judge for Scotch Fancies and Yorks. at their young bird show on July 5, and Mr. Andrew Cowan was appointed. On the President pleading the case of Gateshead and Dis. C.B.S. it was agreed to grant them 5s. We hope the richer societies and clubs will at least double this, and the poorer at least give half. Agreed, that next meeting we have a hat night, all the members to be post-carded for same. The following were elected members: Jas. Pate, W. Herd and Jas. Campbell. Donations for month, £3 0s. 6d. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman. The following are the judges for our open show, Nov. 8: Scotch Fancies, F. Ramsay, Tayport; Borders, W. McAdam, Lasswade; Yorkshires, J. McLennan, Renfrew; Crests, W. Reid, Falkland; Plainheads, A. Chalmers, Kirkintilloch; Mules, Brit. and Foreign, C. Sykes, Musselburgh.—A. Dickson, Sec.

LONDON C.B.A.

New Secretary and New Headquarters.

Adjourned annual general meeting held at their headquarters, "The Feathers' Hotel," Westminster, April 7, when a goodly company attended, President Mr. R. L. Crisp in the chair. Amongst those present were: Messrs. Robson, Dewhurst, Penton, Withers, Matcham, Wallington, Offord, Carson, Smith, Shepherd, Marley, Turner, Mugford, Tyson, Sayer, Easterling, Pretty, Bray, Boxall, and Madame Litchfield. After a little healthy discussion it was unanimously agreed that Mr. James Bray, jun., 64, St. Dunstan's Road, Hammersmith, W., should be approached to hold the important position of hon. sec. Later in the evening the president warmly welcomed our new official, Mr. Bray accepting the office with his usual suavity. All business communications and matters relating to show patronage should be at once forwarded to the address stated above, when it will receive the society's early consideration. Balance sheet for 1912 was handed round, but owing to the printer's delay in delivery it was resolved that it stand over until the next meeting, when our members will have had a better opportunity of perusing the same. After a somewhat lengthy discussion had taken place, it was decided that the headquarters of the association should be removed henceforth to the El Vino Hotel, Piccadilly Place, Piccadilly, W., where the next meeting, on the second Tuesday in the month, will be held, when all old and new members will be heartily and cordially welcomed. The committee, which had on the previous evening received a deputation of the Foreign Bird Exhibitors League, then gave their report, and it was resolved that the L.C.B.A. should accept their patronage, the only stipulation being that all classes should be guaranteed by the F.B.E.L. A most interesting debate was then opened by Mr. J. Robson, on the question of "Size in Canaries," and judging by the opinions expressed by the many able fanciers present, it was not quite proved that the over-sized bird is being discarded in the birdrooms of London fanciers. After a vote of thanks to the opener of the debate and the chairman a most interesting and enjoyable meeting was brought to a close. F. Boxall, Dep. Press Corres.

LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

Monthly meeting held in Oldham Hall, April 10, Mr. J. Abbott in the chair. Seven new members were elected, and five were nominated for membership. Afterwards we had a discussion on hints for breeding season, opened by Mr. J. W. Metcalfe, the lecturer mentioning points to look for as follows: Are your birds ready? fighting; cutting feathers from around vent; nest pan and perches; claws; green food; singing young; young leaving nest; plucking; training young; hand-feeding. These, which brought out a large number of questions and answers, were listened to by a large number of novice members. Most of our novice members report good results of start of breeding season, and we appear like having a record year for 1913.—J. Lloyd, Assist. Sec.

AYR AND DISTRICT C.B.C.

Meeting held in the Academy Hall, Fort Street, April 1st; Mr. J. S. McClure presided over a fair attendance. We would be pleased to see a few more of our members turning up at these monthly meetings and take a fair share of the business of the club. The chairman intimated that patrons' subscriptions had not all been collected for last year. Mr. John Bell was nominated to collect same. Proposed and seconded that we appoint specialist judges for open show. Sec. was instructed to write several judges for terms, and report at next meeting. Decided to accept the terms of Mrs. Dyer for room to hold our meetings, so that all meetings after May will be held in Wallace Tower. Two new members were elected, and the following were elected on committee: W. Lovie, A. Lindsay, A. Cook, A. Boyd, and A. Hainey. Balance-sheet for last year was passed. Our late sec., Mr. C. C. Irvine, has kindly consented to give us a lecture at next meeting; fanciers invited. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.—Robert Aitken, Sec.

NORTH WALES C.B.S.

Committee meeting held April 1th, at the Assembly Rooms. Present: Chairman, Mr. James Jones; Hon. Treas., Mr. R. T. Edwards; Messrs. R. Green, H. Williams, and R. E. Griffith, Hon. Sec. Decided that Sec. put the members' cards in hand of the printers. Old members should rejoin at once, and I also hope to see many new members on my future list. Come let us make a record in all ways, so that we will get a clinking show; it all depends on members of the society. I have done my best in the past, but I intend to do more in future, if possible. I am willing to answer any questions on any matter of the society. His Worship the Mayor of Carnarvon (R. Newton, Esq.) was elected patron. President F. R. Brown has sent a cheque value £2 towards the society. Vice-Presidents, Lady Turner, Sir Thomas E. Roberts, Sir William Preece, Mr. W. S. McDowell, and Mr. E. R. Roberts, have each promised to give one guinea. Messrs. Geo. Brymer and T. M. Lloyd have sent 10s. 6d., so we have a good start. I am expecting a few more, and if any of the late members who may wish to give or promise cash or specials will kindly write to me, I shall be very pleased. We are intending to have a first feather show; date will be fixed at next meeting, April 19th. The committee agreed to leave out the delegates this time. Benefits are to be paid members only at our next open show, which will be held at the end of the year. Grand classification; challenge cups, medals, and other specials, and money prizes. Those who are not members should send P.O. for 1s. at once, so that they will have the full benefit and may be open to compete for all specials. I am sure that the committee will provide a good classification and a special judge.—R. E. Griffith, Hon. Sec.

GRANTHAM C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held at headquarters, Brewers' Arms, Mr. G. Mann in the chair. The chief business was to have been arrangements for the open show, but owing to such a poor turn up of members it was decided to hold it over for the present. A quiet but interesting evening was spent on "Breeding and Colour Feeding" the young bird. All those interested in joining the Society will be welcome at our next meeting, May [illegible], at headquarters, at 8, membership 5s. per annum.—H. [illegible], Hon. Sec.

CLACKMANNANSHIRE C.B.S.

Meeting held in Townhead Tearooms, Alloa, April 12, Mr. David Cook, vice-pres., in the chair. The principal item was an exhibition of a fine collection of wild seeds for British birds, by Mr. Jas. B. Clarke, Rothesay. There was a good turnout, all being very attentive, while an article bearing on their good properties (feeding, colouring, and medicinal), specially written for us by Mr. Clarke, was being read. Full advantage was taken of viewing the specimens (over 80), and fanciers learnt the usefulness of well-known weeds and plants and their seeds, which they had formerly looked upon as useless. A book containing over 100 specimens of wild flowers, the seeds of most being favourites of British birds, was also fully gone into. At the close of the meeting a vote of thanks to Mr. Clarke was proposed by the chairman, and heartily responded to. Four new members were admitted.—Wm. W. Duncan, Sec.

LEYTON C.B.A.

Monthly meeting, held April 7, at Grange Park Hall. Mr. Bartlett occupied the chair, a large muster of members being present. A table show of British was held, some good specimens being staged. The specials for best bird in show, a Goldfinch, and best second, a Bullfinch, also for most points, all went to Mr. G. A. Parker. An egg food competition also took place. There were several competitors, each using a different method, the winner being Mr. J. A. Bartlett. The judges were Mr. J. S. Clarke, for British birds, and Mr. W. Morris, egg food competition. Following this a pleasant surprise awaited the members. A handsome cup of solid silver was handed round for inspection, being the gift of a gentleman who wished to remain anonymous. The conditions attached to the cup were that it should be won three times, not necessarily in succession, by the best unflighted Crest or C.B. at the annual show, the bird to be bred by the exhibitor and closed rung, all paid up members in novice, amateur and champion sections eligible to compete. It was carried unanimously that the secretaries send a letter of appreciation and thanks to the donor. A vote of thanks to the judges, to which both gentlemen suitably responded, and also to the chair, brought an extremely pleasant evening to a close.—A. W. Farmer Hon. Assist. Sec.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

Annual social and presentation of prizes held at the "Church Inn," Huddersfield Road, Oldham, April 12. Twenty fanciers and wives sat down to tea. The after proceedings were opened by Mr. Rukin taking the chair, and presenting the prizes. Mr. G. Fitton, Oldham, took a china tea service as championship prize in Lancashire section, Mr. Hordern, Heywood taking some cutlery as runner-up. Mr. Ollerenshaw, Glossop, won a silver-plated tea-urn, as championship prize in Lizard section, and Mr. F. Hamer, Oldham, some cutlery as runner up. Mr. W. Kay, Macclesfield, won a silver medal in novice Lancashire section. In novice Lizard section, Mr. E. Lord, Newchurch, received a silver rosebowl as winner, and Mr. C. F. Bosworth, Kettering, a gold medal as runner-up. Mr. W. P. Barnes, Grantham, won Ramsden's special, as winner in colour competition in Lizards. Dancing singing, and instrumental music were afterwards indulged in, the star turns being Mr. E. Lord and Mr. F. Steeple, the latter gentleman a prominent Oldham fancier (I nearly said "plainhead"). Altogether a very pleasant evening was spent, several local fanciers turning up after tea. Messrs. Millington, Longsight, and E. Downs, Oldham, were proposed as members. Next meeting will be held in the Rochdale O.C. clubrooms, York Place, Yorkshire Street, Rochdale, April 26, at 7 prompt. A good muster of members is requested, as the chief business is selection of specialist judges, and the proposition on same left over from the Manchester meeting.—Alec. Martin, Hon. Sec.

ANFIELD AND EVERTON C.B.S.

Successful Bohemian Concert.

One of the most enjoyable concerts run by the Fancy in Liverpool was held at the Sandon Hotel, under the chairmanship of Mr. J. W. Metcalfe (chairman Green Canary Association), who opened the proceedings by explaining to those present that the object of the concert was to clear off a debt left on their hands. He hoped the members would stand together like honourable men, pay all just debts, and clear away the stigma that had fallen on so young a society. He trusted they would become one of the strongest societies in the Fancy. After the toast, "The Royal Family," the musical directors, Messrs. Draper and Parsons, presented their troupe of artistes, including Mr. and Mrs. Frank Draper, Chas. Gifford, Geo. Whitehead, Jack Clements, Adelaide Draper, Prof. Ted Traynor, Alf. Newman, Bessie Bower, Rennie and Hirst, Alec. Nimmo, Dave Steinart, and the Roast Joint Quartet, whose talents were greatly appreciated. Mr. M. A. Hinson proposed "Kindred Societies." He was pleased to see so many fanciers from other societies present, and he trusted they would carry in their minds the good fellowship accorded them. It was quite an honour to have them present. He thought the Anfield Society would endeavour to uphold the great reputation which the other Liverpool societies had attained in the past. The society had had a bitter lesson. Mr. Fred Handley, the new sec. of the G.C.A., suitably responded. He hoped the Anfield fanciers would run the smokers regularly; it would serve to bring about a better understanding between the various societies. It was his heartfelt wish that the society might be free from all debt before the show season commenced; it would be a pleasure to him to help them along. We had quite a large gathering, the room being packed. Over 150 tickets were sold, and we hope to clear about £5 off the debts we owe. Practically all the members were present, and we extend our thanks to the following ladies and gentlemen who helped us along:—Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Metcalfe, Mr. and Mrs. Deacon, Mr. and Mrs. Brunskill, Mr. and Mrs. Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Nimmo, Mr. and Mrs. Handley, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Parsons, and lady friends, Mr. and Mrs. Parker, Mr. and Mrs. Billy Woods, Mr. Charley Robinson, and some ladies whose names we did not catch. There will be an extraordinary [illegible] soon, when we fix up a meeting room, [illegible] only attend meetings called by [illegible] and Redpath, Hon. Secs., Shaw Street, Liverpool.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—6d. for the first eighteen words. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen. Name and address to be reckoned. MINIMUM, 18 words 6d.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first Eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Sixpence.

Headlines or Footlines, 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6, according to size.

ADVERTISEMENTS UNACCOMPANIED BY CORRECT REMITTANCE WILL NOT BE INSERTED.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements must in all cases bear the bona fide name and address of the advertiser, and no advertisement will be inserted if addressed to a receiving office, or similar place of call.

Small prepaid advertisements of a general nature and not connected in any way with the Cage Bird Trade are inserted at the rate of ½d. per word throughout. Minimum 12 words 6d.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the advertisement Manager. CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

Advt. Manager. "Cage Birds."

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which me must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expirration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

The surest guide to prize winning—the most authoritative work on Canaries and British Birds—the work in which the world's leading experts give freely and fully of their specialized knowledge is

CANARIES, HYBRIDS & BRITISH BIRDS.

By JOHN ROBSON
and
Many Specialist Contributors.

166 Illustrations, 26 Being Coloured to Life.

This massive and superb volume interests you in every aspect of the hobby. The whole of the contents are reliable—only those men who know most of the respective branches of the hobby were asked to write, and their contributions have undergone the keen editorial scrutiny of Mr. S. H. LEWER, the well-known author of "The Feathered World." It is therefore a book every bird-lover should possess, because every point is dealt with. Not only the ordinary care of pets, but full and dependable advice on their ailments. Not only really helpful instruction for the daily welfare of birds, but concise details on Exhibition condition and how to attain it. As an investment Canaries and Cage Birds are exceedingly profitable if carried out on right lines—there is always a keen demand for better-than-average specimens, and a ready sale for young birds bred from good stock. The profit side of the hobby is expertly told in this work by men who have made "pots of money" at it—they here present you with their knowledge. In short, everything about bird-keeping can be learned from this work, which is practical and explicit in every detail.

To the man who keeps birds for breeding or exhibition purposes, to whom every point that counts for quality—whether of form, or plumage, or song—is of consequence, this work will prove invaluable, supplying practical information and instruction that will greatly help in the effort to pull off prizes.

Every stage of preparation or provision is minutely described in terms that cannot be misunderstood, with an amplitude of detailed illustration that will be exceedingly serviceable.

On the lines here laid down, success in breeding and exhibiting—and there is good money to be made in both directions—ought to be easy of attainment. If you follow the advice given, your birds will always look their best on the show bench.

To the beginner the book will be most valuably practical. It gives the right advice for buying; saves you from mistakes by explaining which are the best birds, and why they are so—their points and qualities are recognizably set forth.

Then the most suitable housing arrangements for each class of bird are described in detail and fully illustrated. The important question of food receives equally adequate attention, so that the novice on all these points may know unerringly that he is doing the best for his pets in regard to comfort and well-being. He also has the satisfaction that he is doing it all at the minimum cost and in the best way possible.

THE RED FEED

This brilliant feed is quite apart from the ordinary red peppers on the market; it may look the same, but it acts differently; it is properly mixed with hot Natal and another ingredient, which will give your birds that delightful sheen which you cannot get out of plain ordinary red peppers. Fanciers invariably ask: How do you get that wonderful colour in your birds? The secret is this ready-for-use red feed. Give it a trial on a few birds this year, and I guarantee you will have no other next. It goes further, and gives better colour. Sold in tins, 2/6, or double the quantity 4/9, post free: Judge Silk, Whitstable. (650)

"PHOSTO"

The greatest discovery of modern times. Bird breeding made easy. This remarkable food imparts new life in your birds, and gives vigour to those which have seemed played out. Bad breeding hens is really only insufficient energy. "Phosto" is priceless to hens. Remember, "Phosto" has never been known to fail. Let me prove to you that hens will feed after using "Phosto"; young ones benefit from it and will come off the nest sooner and stronger. It has made quite a big stir amongst the well-known fanciers. These are not wild statements, but genuine facts. Test it yourself and you will be loud in its praise. Don't be tempted into buying something else valueless, insist on having "Phosto." Sold in tins, 1/-, 2/6, and 4/6, post free: a large tin will last you the season: The Norwich Specialist, Judge Silk, Whitstable. (666)

CANARY breeding for beginners, 7d., by Claude St. John. A practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

DO you know just what benefit you are deriving from your hobby? It is necessary to keep some account, and it may be kept in the most compact and handy form if you use, "The Stock Book, and Breeding-room Register," compiled by G. E. Westen; this makes bird-breeding easy. In addition to all that is required to enable the breeder to see at a glance how he stands, there are many hints for times of emergency. Price 7d., post free, from: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

HOUSE'S Canary Manual, 1/2, by C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

EGGRINE TRADE MARK

The best Egg Food ever known for Rearing and keeping in Health and Song all kinds of Canaries, etc. Invaluable to those having an Aviary. This food will positively rear young Canaries without any chopped egg or other preparations, far better than egg alone, and is decidedly the Best Food ever brought before the public. For getting hens into breeding condition its effects will be found wonderful. It is made fresh every few days, hence, unlike any of the preparations made from foreign yolk of eggs, Eggrine is being made from New Laid English Eggs, including the "White" of same a very important item,—and other valuable ingredients on the premises. Tins, post free, 1/3; larger, holding three times the quantity, post free 2/6. Give it one test trial and be convinced.

CANARIES Every variety for breeding, also, Mules, Goldfinches, Linnets, Bullfinches, Talking Parrots, Budgerigars, etc. Illustrated list free.

NOTICE to keepers and breeders of Budgerigars; much valuable information is given by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., in "Nutshell No. 18," 2½d., post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. (2d. from agents, a list of whom is published frequently).

THERE is no more lovely seed-eater than the popular Gouldian Finch, which, however, is very difficult to establish. This trouble can be overcome, and the variety kept successfully. But you must follow the hints given in "Nutshell No. 14," from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C., post free for 2½d. From agents (see list frequently published) 2d.

TALKING Parrot, exceptionally fine plumage, most clever talker living, speaks fully 150 words, many long sentences, tame, perches on finger and talks to to you, kisses you, greatest mimic imaginable, laughs, cries, dances, sings "Oh, dear," "Polly dear," whistles "Pop goes," "Bogie Man," four years old; sent approval before payment; £3 15/-, including cage: E. Milton, Eagle Chambers, Liverpool. (660)

WAXBILLS! (Golden breasted, Orange-cheeked, Grey, and St. Helena). Than this interesting quartette, which can be purchased at from 2/6 to 7/6 a pair, there are few more charming foreigners. They can be successfully kept, too, with little difficulty if you will follow the hints given by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., in "Nutshell No. 20," 2½d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Call at any of our agents and get it for 2d. (list frequently published).

solved. For full proofs send postcard at once for my large book, "Parrot Prattle." This is the most wonderful book ever offered free of all charge to all Parrot fanciers. (This "Parrot Prattle" is registered copyright, and all infringers and imitators will be proceeded against). It contains hundreds of testimonials from all parts with full names and addresses, many interesting facts, and gives valuable advice and hints to all Parrot buyers. Full details of our original system of selling Parrots on four weeks' trial, at our risk, which we were the first to introduce. We sell Parrots of all descriptions on four weeks' trial, at our risk, before settlement. Cheapest and best in the Kingdom, and any Parrot sold by us and not giving full satisfaction, will be exchanged any time within twelve months. Remember we lead and others try to follow. Write to other dealers as well as us, and judge for yourselves. Lists of Parrots for sale and above book post free on receipt of postcard. Telephone No. 40 Morecambe.

Cokernut Husk Nests

We supply the world. We sell more husk nests than all other dealers combined; 30,000 in stock. "Please send 6 dozen husk nests.—Takacs Kalman, Budapest." We give satisfaction. In repeating his order, Mr. Lesaux, Lawrie Park Road, Sydenham, says: "The others you sent were very satisfactory, and several of my friends have ordered from you." Why don't you try a sample set for 1s., and see what good husk nests look like. They last a lifetime, and do not disgrace your aviary. Double wired, 2/-, 4/-, 6/- dozen; Giants, for Cockatiels, etc., only procurable from me, 12/- doz.; shell nests, the ideal sleeping place for small foreigners, 6/-, 9/- doz.; box nests for Budgerigars, 1/-; Parrakeets, 1/6; Parrots, 2/-; varnished, 6d. extra; unwired husks, 1/- doz., 8/- 100; selected, 12/-; Cokernut Fibre Dust for cages and aviaries; no sore feet or dirty tails; sample, 6d., sack 2/-. THE TRIALS OF A NOVICE.

Although disappointment was his portion, our correspondent is longing to show what he can do this season.

Sir,—My better-half exclaimed the other year on my announcing to her the fact that my second nest of eggs—from a hen Canary that was paired with a Goldie—were all empty: "You'll ruin us yet with your birds!" I had explained to her the possibility of getting a bird worth many pounds from that very pair, and it was mainly the vision of the gold that obtained her consent to purchase a 7s. 6d. Goldie, together with a big buff hen, with a view to breeding clear mules. Alas! "Clear" eggs have been plentiful, but the "clear" Mules have kept clear of me as yet. But let me begin at the beginning. In August of 1911 I succeeded in overcoming the wife's scruples against the "mess" made by birds in the house. Women are weak creatures, and a little diplomatic manœuvring generally fetches them. I managed it, at any rate, gladly complying with her strict injunction that there was to be no more than one. Accordingly, I bought a Border cock from a breeder who had gained some notoriety at local shows, at the same time purchasing a lovely cage for him. This deal cost me 10s. 6d., including cage.

Getting on the "Soft-side" of her.

I determined to have a mate for him. After enlarging to my wife a little on how lovely he seemed, and how a hen would cheer him up, etc., she caved in. Women are very touchy on this point, and are ever ready to advise their unmarried friends to "splice up." They don't believe in bachelors. I repaired to the fancier from whom I obtained the cock, and asked for a yellow hen. He let me have one for 2s. 6d., and I was gratified once more. This led to the beginning of my trials. When I returned from work next day the wife greeted me with the remark: "That's a rare whistler, that bird you got." "What bird?" "The hen, of course," says she; and just at that moment my latest purchase began to rattle off its baby song in a way which left me in little doubt as to its sex. I acquainted the breeder, who replied that he had not another hen for sale, and at the same time cautioned me that though it was whistling it might be a hen. As I did not lose by it, I said nothing more. I have that bird yet, and a tip-top singer he is!

Trouble Number Two.

There I was with two males, and the wife determined no more would come to the house. The fever was on me now, however, and I was quite as determined I would have a hen for each of these cocks; and this brought me to trial number two. I went to another fancier, and asked him to give me as good a hen as he could for 2s. 6d. It must have been a kind Providence which prompted me to ask him for "tick" till the end of the fortnight, although I had the money on me at the time. Certainly it was no business instinct of mine. When night came I wondered what the unearthly squeaking was, and on looking at my hen, saw her body working like a pair of bellows, while she emitted noises not unlike a badly oiled barrow wheel. "Serves you right!" was all the consolation I got from the wife. I returned this hen that same night, and its owner brought another to me next day. To cut a long story short I managed to get a pair of fairly good hens, and thought I would settle down till breeding time. I did, till I met a fancier who preached me a sermon on the glories and possibilities of mule breeding! This fancier, by the way, had once bred clear Siskin mules, but had sold them for a mere song to a dealer, who re-sold them at 2,000 per cent. profit. My friend had then thrown over the hobby in disgust. He had come back to his old love however, and so pictured its possibilities to me that I was captivated, and forthwith decided to throw over the Borders in favour of mule breeding. I managed to dispose of three, one cock and two hens, losing 2s. by the deal. The first British bird I bought was a Linnet. I paid 1s. for him, but he never steadied down, and in a few weeks was no more. I next bought a big buff hen, 3s. 6d. she cost me, although I am positive that the dealer said 3s. to me when I enquired her price two nights previously.

By the way, I always buy birds at night since my experience with the "wheezy" hen. That it does not always pay to do so will be made apparent when I relate my next trial. I was accosted one morning by a brother in the fancy with the remark: "I have procured a hen for you." I went up at night, and duly noticed that she was not wheezy, paid the 2s. 6d. he asked, and came away satisfied. I found afterwards that she had plenty of other ailments. She had

By WILLIAM DUNLOP senr.

IT is now about twenty years since I fell in love with the Scotch Fancy. At that time it was a different bird from to-day—it was more of a Circle and did not show so much of the Belgian. The bird, too, was more plentiful, and could be bought for a much lower price. A lover of birds from my boyhood days, I always intended when I could afford to get a pair, and I did so, and felt proud of them. As years rolled on I improved my stock, for at that time in Ballymoney and neighbourhood a great number of Canaries were bred. But none of the breeders exhibited any, and to-day when I look over the names of men who were breeders of the Bird O'Circle I am sorry to say I find they have all passed over to the great majority and I am left alone.

Recommendation of the Bird o' Circle.

I differed with these men inasmuch as I said I would show my birds, and not being content with a fair-looking specimen, I bought a fairly good team in Scotland, and made my first appearance at Belfast (Ulster O.A. winning a first and a second and special and a fourth. Delighted with my success, ever since that I have kept and bred and exhibited the Scotch Fancy. I have had my ups and downs, but fought on, and have bred many a good one since I started. Many a year I bred very few, but I never was daunted, and I am a keener fancier to-day than on the day I started. Further, I can recommend the Scotch Fancy, as it is as prolific and as hardy as any other high-class variety of the Canary family, while you have no colour-feeding to do. It is a very intelligent bird, and knows its owner well. When you lift the cage it springs into action and shows for all it is worth, and a good Scotch Fancy when "showing off" is a treat to look at.

When breeding, you don't need to give any more attention than you would to any other variety. When selecting a pair, get the best you can and always pair two good ones. Don't pair a good cock and a fair hen, and then a good hen and a fair cock; pair your two best, for one good young one is worth a cage full of wasters. I advise every one not to keep more than they can properly look after, and to winter them well, for that is the secret of success. If properly looked after I will guarantee this breed will repay one for the trouble and care bestowed on it.

Some people say the Scotch Fancy is on the decline, and that you can hear the sighing and the sobbing of the winds as they rustle through the autumn leaves of the Scotch Fancy's existence—that is to say, it has seen its spring and its summer. But don't believe it, for it will come to the front again just as sure as the sun shines. It has dropped behind a little, and those a great deal to blame for this are the men who breed a great number and who know every point about it. If they would give us their experiences, I believe it would do the Scotch Fancy Canary a great amount of good.

A Hint Young Men Should Take.

I would say to the young man starting life, as it were, that Canary breeding is the best hobby he could take up; one that will pay its way, too, and one that has no vice connected with it. It wiles away many an hour that might be spent in a wrong way, and it suits the man bearing the burden in the heat of the day when he comes home from his work and gets his tea and he and his children go into the bird-room. As he attends to the birds' wants, and his wife and children help him, he forgets the toils of the day, and he is rejoiced to hear the merry chatter of the children as each claim a bird to be "theirs." I have a little lad of five years old who helps me to feed mine each day. It also suits the man whose sun is fast setting in the western skies; as he sits and looks at his birds, it awakens memories of days gone by, when he dreamed of the time he would be a leading light on the show bench. He listens to the birds' singing, and feels young again! I wish CAGE BIRDS every success. The Fancy cannot be too thankful for a paper like CAGE BIRDS, wherein we can exchange our views, no matter how far we may be apart, and I do hope that some of our Scotch friends, or some of our Belfast brethren, will give us their experiences

SOUTHERN BORDER F.C.

The meeting called to discuss the formation of a Border Fancy Canary Club for the South of England and Wales was held at the Guildhall, Wandsworth Road, S.W., April 17th. Mr. H. Norman presided over a good number of fanciers. After discussing the question very fully, and carefully examining the pros and cons, it was decided to form a club to look after the interests of birds and fanciers alike. The name adopted was "The Southern Fancy Border Club," the membership to be open to fanciers residing in that part of England south of a line drawn from Chester to Lincoln, and the whole of Wales; the subscription to be 2s. 6d. per annum, with 1s. entrance fee, the headquarters to be at the Guildhall, Wandsworth Road, S.W.; meetings to be held on the fourth Thursday in each month. It was decided that no entrance fee be charged for joining the society during 1913. A useful committee, composed of well-known lovers of the Border, was formed:—Mr. H. Norman as chairman; Mr. McGuffie, vice-chair; Mr. Newley, treas.; Mr. F. Moore, hon. sec.; and Messrs. Burton, Bathbury, Saunders, Onslow, Harrison, Freeman, Gallop, and Plank, committee. A committee meeting will be held April 30 to discuss and frame the rules, which will be submitted to a general meeting of members May 22. The society is starting with 50 members, and the committee is desirous of making the club the strongest specialist club in the South. The initial outlay is, of course, rather heavy, and it is hoped all lovers of the "wee gems" will join So come along, ye Border breeders from Wales and the South, and assist the committee. I shall be pleased to answer all enquiries.—F. Moore, Hon. Sec., 49, Kelmscott Road, Clapham Junction, London, S.W

BRIGHTON AND HOVE C.B.A.

The following points were gained by members in the competitions held in connection with the March table show, the class awards of which were published in last week's issue. Judging competition: H. Bignell 55, W. Wall 53, E. Holley 50, C. Pearson 41, A. Goble 33, F. Dandridge 24. Points competition show: H. James 18, H. T. Gibb 16, F. Dandridge 12, D. Dean 6, G. Absolon 5, Rev. Miller 3, H. Bignell 1.—Will H. Gibb, Hon. Sec.

CITY OF BRADFORD O.S.

Meeting held at Flying Dutchman Hotel, April 19th, before a moderate attendance. Deputy Chairman, Mr. G. Hunter, in the chair. Allotting of members' specials occupied the greater part of the evening's business. We are still continuing to add New members to our society, two more being duly enrolled. Letters were read from judges who had kindly consented to judge our members' shows for the season, and also from those declining. A few members are in arrears with their subscriptions. Decided to write these before returning their names to the Union. However, we sincerely hope to receive their subscriptions and so be able to see them amongst us during this season. We are anticipating, and have every prospect of, a splendid season.—P. N. Jenkinson (Assist. Sec.)

NORWICH CREST AND YORKSHIRE C.C. OF ULSTER.

Meeting held at headquarters, Clarence Place Hall, May Street, April 5th, Mr. Adams presiding over a well attended meeting. The Sec. (Mr. Barkley) we are sorry to say, has been laid up for some time, and I am sure I am only expressing the wishes of the whole Fancy of Ireland that he may have a speedy recovery and be with us again. His duties were taken up by that ever-obliging member, Mr. James Stewart. Three new members proposed: Messrs. McCoy, Sands, and Patterson. Several items were mentioned including specials for our last show which have not yet come to hand, and other matters of great importance to the Fancy. As Mr. Stewart had got little or no notice of the above, it was decided that they should come up for consideration at our next meeting. Would all members take note of this and attend to give a helping hand, as Mr. Stewart must find it rather hard to do what he would like.—Walter Connell, Assist. Sec.

LEIGH AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Lecture on British birds, by Mr. P. Hart, was given at the meeting on April 16. Mr. H. Taylor took the chair, and said he was very glad to see so many members present, but there might have been more, as he thought that every member ought to make a special effort to attend these lectures, as nothing pleased the lecturers more than good attendances. He hoped that the members present would take notice of what Mr. Hart had to say, so that they could fire at him with questions. Mr. Hart said, that having been asked to give his experience in the feeding and steadying of British birds, he thought he would just drop a few notes down, although so much had been put in the Fancy papers on the subject that it had almost got threadbare. The first consideration, he said, was to take great care of their birds, keep them clean, give them plenty of clean gritty sand, and good seed; give them the bath liberally, and don't forget any small tit-bit they may like; any extra trouble spent on one's birds would not be in vain, as they always seemed more attractive when well cared for. For freshly-caught birds a good sized cage would be 18 x 12, and of a fairish depth. Always keep the bottom strewed with clean gritty sand, give them crushed seed to start; it was a very difficult task for them, coming straight from the fields, to crack hard seed, as most of the seed they had had previously was in succulent form and very soft. It would always pay one to have plenty of freshly gathered wild seeds to give them, to coax them on for a few days; put their seed and water within easy reach, so that they can easily see it. Fanciers sometimes lost freshly-caught birds, perhaps young ones, through expecting them to bob their heads through a hole to get at their food and water. Leave them alone, and keep them quiet until you see they are giving their minds to eating, then hang the seed hopper on, with mixed seed in, and try and find out what kind of seed they like, as by studying their food one could easily give them plenty of that which they liked best. When you see they are on hard seed all right, and going into the bath, then you may consider that your hardest task is over. Now comes the time for steadying. Every time you go up to them, get a sunflower seed, or anything else they like, put it on the end of the perch, and after a few times you will soon see that they will look forward to your coming. Most Goldfinches can be got steady by having plenty of thistle heads by you, and offering them one every time you are near. Bullfinches and Greenfinches he had always found to be easily steadied, the former liked plenty of berries, whilst the latter were very fond of sunflower seeds. Chaffinches and Buntings were very partial to mealworms, and although a little difficult to steady down, they soon get accustomed to having a worm offered to them. Of course you must not expect them to jump straight down when you offering these tit-bits, and take them out of your fingers, they will be shy at first, but keep holding them until your arm gets tired, and you will find out that your patience will be rewarded, and once you have gained their confidence you will find out that it will not be forgotten soon. He concluded by thanking the members for their kind attention given. Several question were asked, which Mr. Hart readily answered to the satisfaction of the members present. We concluded a very pleasant evening by Mr. Ordish moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Hart for the instructive way in which he had given his lecture; this was seconded by Mr. Seddon, supported by Messrs. Dawson and Hamer, and readily accorded by all the members, and Mr. Hart suitably responded.—R. Charleson, Hon. Sec.

LIVERPOOL FANCIERS' CYCLE CLUB.

The Liverpool boys were greatly disappointed last Sunday at not being able to visit the Widnes fanciers. All our members are in deep sympathy with Mr. Jenkins and Mr. Hayes in their recent troubles, and I am sure all fanciers will sympathise with these two esteemed birdy men. We carried the run through, and we had a splendid day. We could not wish for a better pilot than Mr. Jack Abbot, while Mr. Steinhart was very much in evidence again with his pillow-case full of chickweed hanging on the back of his bike. Passing through Frodsham we observed a large number of birds flying south. We all returned home "in the pink." Headquarters, Sunday next, at 2 p.m. sharp.—R. Malone, Hon. Sec.

COWDENBEATH C.B.S.

A lecture on pairing and breeding was given by Messrs. Stenhouse and Dickson, Kelty, in the Arcade Rooms, April 2, Mr. J. C. Murrey in the chair. Mr. Stenhouse commenced by saying he had bred Scotch Fancies for the past eighteen years, and he would give his ideas on that variety. He always went round his stock and selected the most likely pairs to produce what he wanted, and, instead of running them beside one another right away, he put them in separate cages, and stood them in a position so as to see one another. This, he said, prevents the birds getting damaged by fighting. He then got on to the points to breed for, and the best way to obtain them, the Belgian Canary, being introduced to get the shoulder. He advised those who intended going in for breeding Canaries to pay a fair price for them, so as to get good blood, and try to get an experienced fancier to help them to select when buying. He then invited questions, and he would try and answer them as clear as possible. Many different questions were answered in a very satisfactory way. Mr. Dickson was asked to give some hints on his Fancy, it being the Norwich Plainhead. This he did, and also invited questions, giving his method of colour feeding, fixing the colour, and pairing to get the best results. A very hearty vote of thanks to the lecturers and the chairman brought an interesting meeting to a close.—J. W. Holms, Sec.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

First meeting of the new Council, held at the Market Tavern, Bradford, April 19, Mr. H. W. Walsh (President) in the chair. The President, in his opening remarks thanked the Council for the honour conferred upon him in being elected to that honourable position, and trusted that by diligent attention to the business of the Council to acquit himself as capably as many of his predecessors. Mr. Walsh took the opportunity of giving a hearty welcome to the delegates of two new societies, Keighley C.B.S. and Bankfoot C.B.S. The first business related to the disbanding of the Hebden Bridge and Calder Valley O.S., and their resignation from the Union was accepted with regret. Thanks were expressed to Mr. W. Errington, Bradford, for the gift of four valuable special prizes, two for champions and two for the novices, to be competed for at Union shows during the present season, by exhibitors using his colour-feed. Decided that the printing of handbooks, show rules, etc., should be let by tender, and several firms were named for the Secretary to write to. A grant was made by the Union towards defraying the expenses of the last annual prize distribution. Arrangements were made by the Council for the novice colour feed competitions, prizes given by Mr. J. W. Ramsden and Mr. W. Errington. The new arrangement passed by the annual ballot whereby the novice competition should be divided into two periods, necessitated the Council passing a resolution that the prizes should be awarded to the winner of the highest percentage of points in either period of the competition, thus points gained in either period will be divided by the total number of shows to obtain the average. Points gained in the first period of the competition will not be counted over to the second period, but should a competitor (not winning his novice medal in the first period) continue to show for the colour feed prizes in the second period, he shall be credited with the highest percentage of points which he may have won in either period. Also decided that as there will be 13 Union shows, that the first six should form the first period of the competition, and the remaining seven the second period. Proposed to give twelve gold novice medals for competition, nine for Yorks., and three for Norwich; four Yorkshire medals and one Norwich will be given for the first period, and five Yorks. and two Norwich for the second period. It is to be hoped that this arrangement will tend to swell the entries at the latter end shows held by the Union. Mr. F. Hammond was elected as treasurer for the ensuing year; the following sub-committee was also appointed, Messrs. J. W. Kaberry, G. R. Rushworth, F. Allen, J. Horsfield, F. Hodgson, W. B. Atkinson, and J. E. Hudson. Owing to the finances of the Union having somewhat diminished during the past few years, it was decided to increase the levy per member from 8d. to 9d., this amount will just about cover the deficit which is taking place yearly under the old levy of 8d. per member. Several delegates pointed to this mode of procedure being absolutely necessary to carry the affairs of the Union to a successful issue, and Mr. F. Hammond, as treasurer, and Mr. H. H. Towers, trustee, made a strong appeal to the Council. Upon a proposition that the hat should be sent round the Council on behalf of the Gateshead Society, Mr. F. Hammond made a stirring appeal on behalf of the Society. A sum of £1 1s. 6d. was collected, and this will be duly sent on. Every society but one in the Union was represented at this Council meeting, which speaks volumes for the interest and enthusiasm displayed in the affairs of the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S. Will all secretaries kindly send in their members' names and addresses, along with the members' fees, on or before May, 1, according to Rule 9. Novice members should have "N" marked opposite their names.—H. Hill, Secretary.

BRADFORD WEST C.B.A.

Monthly meeting held at the "Shoulder of Mutton," Girlington, Bradford, April 13th, Mr. W. Crabtree in the chair. Resolved that the competitions be as last year, and that we have four members' shows as usual. First feather show, June 28th. Three old shows, viz., October 29th, November 12th, December 27th. Resolved that the members' cups be competed for in the professional classes; also the Payne cup, kindly presented by Mr. J. Payne, of the "Shoulder of Mutton" last year, to be won twice in succession, or three times in all in the amateur and novice section, and the Sunderland cup for the runners-up. Resolved that we accept the three tea services kindly given by the President, Mr. W. Crabtree, value 21s., and the Secretary, Mr. A. Cooper, value 15s. and 10s. respectively, to be won outright by three starred birds throughout the four members' shows. Also that the society gives 8s., 6s., 4s. in each section. Mr. E. Butterfield will give 5s. in first feather show for most points in novice section. Mr. E. Clegg 5s. for best bird in each old show, and Messrs. Cowgill, Mountain and Whitely 5s. for best bird in each old show, opposite colour. Mr. W. H. Kilburn 5s. in each section for most entries throughout the season. Mr. F. Western's resignation from all offices on account of business matters, was received with regret, Mr. A. Cooper was elected to act as sec. and delegate in his place. Mr. W. H. Kilburn was elected assist. sec. Monthly meetings held every 2nd Saturday at the "Shoulder of Mutton," Girlington, Bradford, at 8 p.m., when we shall be pleased to see any intending members who can obtain full particulars from the secretary. Subscriptions are now due, and we shall be pleased to receive same.—A. Cooper, Sec.; W. H. Kilburn, Assist. Sec.

WEST STANLEY C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held April 19th, Mr. Butler in chair; only a very poor attendance. It would be more satisfactory if members would turn up as we had some very important business on hand, which ought to have been settled, but had to be left over owing to the poor turn-up. After the usual business we decided to give a donation of 5s. to the Cage Birds fund for Gateshead. We expect at our next meeting, and up till our annual show, to have a lecturer here, so members please put in an appearance.—W. Elliott.

DONCASTER C.B.S.

Special meeting held April 19 in Black Bull Hotel, Mr. C. Presley presiding over the best attendance since the society was founded. It was decided to hold annual open show on Jan. 10. In conjunction with the meeting a table show was held of British birds, and some very fine birds were on view. Our old friend Mr. Barker, Bentley, judged once more, and placed the awards to everybody's satisfaction. A judging competition was also held, for which a silver medal was given to the one getting nearest the judge's awards. The scrutineers, Messrs. Presley and Smedley, declared Mr. Tonkinson the winner, with Messrs. Smith and Lumby runners-up. The following were the awards in show: BRITISH CAGE-MOULTED: 1, 2, Wade; 3, Simpson; vhc, Pogmore; hc, c, Presley. FIELD-MOULTED: 1, 3, Bescoby; 2, Poppleton; vhc, hc, Truman; c, Presley.—G. Hunt, Hon. Sec.

BEDFORD O.S.

Table show of Britishers and surplus stock held at Ham's Restaurant, April 17, Mr. A. Keech made the awards. GOLDF. or BULLF.: 1, Wilmot, good coloured Bullie, in prime condition; 2, res, vhc, Wright and Mayo, all Goldies, winner a very smart Finch, good blaze, very steady; 3, Notley, good coloured Goldie, prime condition, good blaze; hc, Simms. A.O.V. BRIT.: 1, Wilmot, excellent Hawfinch, good bib, very steady; 2, vhc, Brewer, very nice Greenfinch, good size and col., steady; 3, c, Notley, very smart Reed Bunting, good markings; res, Wilmot, bonny little Siskin; hc, Simons. During the evening Mr. C. H. Goodman gave an interesting demonstration of preparing egg food, and introduced his well-known "Filup" feeder, showing the advantages it had over the old system of feeding with a match. He also stated that the feeder was having a big sale this season.—J. C. Wilmot.

LONGTON C.B.S.

Meeting held at Swan Hotel, April 8, Mr. McMurtrie in the chair. Proposed by Mr. Peake and carried that Mr. J. H. Roe judge our nest feather show, June 14. Decided that entry fee be 7d. per cage for members and 1s. per cage for the two open classes. We have a very nice lot of specials promised, and should like to enrol more fanciers, so please see what you can do and make this society one of the largest in the land. The sub. is only 3s., and we have a silver cup, a grand medallion, and other grand specials. Fanciers desirous of joining, please attend our next meeting or write to me for full particulars. We should like Roller Canary fanciers in the district to join us. We are enrolling new members every week; two more new members at our last meeting. We have changed our headquarters to the Roebuck Hotel, Caroline Street, one minute's walk from the car.—P. E. Barker, Hon. Sec., 6, Prospect Place.

WALKLEY C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held April 10, St. Philip's Mission Room, Mr. T. Ridal in the chair supported by Messrs. J. G. Cowley and J. Woolhouse. The feature of the meeting was a lecture on British Birds and their Seeds, by Mr. T. Bishop, who for over an hour took his hearers through the various British Softbills, describing each bird minutely, and also its food. Then on to the Hardbill section, also mentioning every kind he had kept, the various ways of procuring wild seed, his methods as to whether they should be colour-fed or not. The members were delighted, and many questions were fired at him by our British bird-keepers. It was voted the best lecture on British heard at a Walkley meeting. Mr. Browning, Rotherham, was elected judge for nest feather show. The Sec. made statement re tea, which showed that after all expenses paid a slight profit was left. Some members have not straightened up for their tickets, so the profit up to now is nil. May meeting is for arrangements for nest feather show. Committee bear in mind meeting May 5 at 95, Winter Street, 8 o'clock, for classification, etc.—C. Tomlinson, Sec.

EDINBURGH C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held April 12, President (Mr. A. W. Watson) in the chair. A large turn-out of members present. A letter from Mr. Steel, Dalkeith, was read in connection with ramble which is to take place in the near future. The most suitable time, he suggested, would be the end of June or early in July. Four new members were admitted: Messrs. W. B. Adam, P. Hoy, A. Moffat, and Skinner. Classification for annual show then came up for discussion. Ultimately it was decided that it remain as formerly. Decided that we have three judges this year instead of four, the following gentlemen being nominated: Norwich, Mr. J. Winter (Edinburgh), Mr. C. Millar (Leith) as reserve. Borders and Scotch Fancy, Mr. Wm. McAdam (Lasswade), Mr. Arnot (Kirkcaldy) coming in as reserve. British and Foreign, Mr. J. Sykes (Musselburgh), reserve, Mr. J. F. Dewar (Edinburgh.) A very enthusiastic meeting was brought to a close with a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. W. Sykes, who so kindly gave his services as judge at table show. The following were the prize winners: GOLDF.: 1, Brown; 2, Watson. LINNET. 1, Watson; 2, Craft; 3, Dick. BUNTINGS: 1, 2, Watson; 3, 4, Russell. SISKIN, ETC.: 1, Russell; 2, 3, Sayers; 4, Dick. A.O.V. FINCH: 1, Watson; 2, 3, Craft; 4, 7, Allan; 5, Craig; 6, Russell. MULES: 1, 3, Craig; 2, Watson; 4, Staines. Mr. Sykes' judging was all that could be desired, and he left no room for comment.—J. C. Charlton, Sec.

A LECTURE ON THE YORKSHIRE CANARY.

Meeting and lecture, held at St. Thomas's Schools, Ardwick, April 1st, Mr. Robinson in the chair, and a record number of members present. Usual business was gone through previous to lecture. Mr. Atkinson, on being called to give his lecture on the Yorkshire Canary, met with a grand reception. In opening his lecture, he stated he was pleased to be amongst us, and hear of the progress we were making as a society. He also hoped we would continue to do so in our new premises. He had not had the pleasure of meeting us in the old meeting place, but he must congratulate us on the new move we had made, the room being nice and cosy, and well lit. Mr. Atkinson stated that his remarks would be directed to the novices. It was usual for speakers to excuse themselves, because the ground had been gone over so much before, and then we also had the Fancy Press, but as his arguments were based on facts, he could not do any harm, and he hoped what he said would assist us in producing Yorkshires quite up to the Specialist Club standard, especially those who were serving their apprenticeship, as the future of the Yorkshire depended on them.

Why do the Judges Differ?

In looking at the Yorkshire, the lecturer stated we must have the ideal in our minds eye; we must work on that, and try to improve, as many fanciers to-day would have been at the top of the tree had they not overlooked some of the principal things they should have borne in mind, notably, the ultimate position of the Yorkshire Canary. All our efforts should be concentrated towards getting the ideal specimen. How was it, the lecturer asked, that judges differed towards this ideal? If we would look into the various awards, we would find there was very little difference, as judges were influenced by their own experiences in their efforts to obtain a perfect specimen. A fancier may possess in his stock some birds with good heads and shoulders, others with bad wings and tails, so he proceeds to rectify and counterbalance what is lacking in each, working gradually and carefully. He especially asked us to work on these lines, and work up our stock on the good points; this would be a matter of experience to ourselves. Probably, he stated, some of us were present at the last Belle Vue show, and noticed the winning ticked yellow Yorkshire; could anyone imagine anything being put in front of that bird; this was only to show that judges differed only on the minor points.

Sticking to the Standard.

As for the standard Yorkshire, we must try and get as near as possible to that laid down by the Specialist Club, and he hoped judges also would be made to stick to that standard. The Yorkshire, as laid down by the club, must be a bird of position, for which we get 20 points, erect, and with fearless carriage, perpendicular in carriage, head, neck, and back in one straight line. He hoped he had made this quite clear, as it was one of the most important points. Feathers must be close and tight, compact body feather, silky, and no fluff, and tight to the body, for this also we got 20 points. Head must be small and round, skull narrow, with a graceful curve continuing to the neck. Eye to be well set in centre of head, but he had noticed the eye of the hens seem to be lower down, which made it appear to be more round. All the same, we must tolerate no sign of flatness. Neck must be moderately long and straight, but he had also observed in this point birds in box cage seemed to be shorter and thicker. He strongly advised us to make sure of birds showing these points by getting them well used to the show cage before parting with them, as not being up to the ideal. Shoulders must be round and narrow, tapering to a neat waist. Breast must be round and smooth, and here we must have the thickest part of the bird. There must be no frill whatever. Legs must be long, without being stilty. Thighs well clothed; nothing adds more to the beauty of the Yorkshire than being well balanced on a good pair of legs. Here the lecturer gave us a good hint, stating that if we had a bird with scaly legs and feet, a good cure was to bathe them in a solution of warm water and glycerine.

Returning to the Yorkshire, the tail must be long, and nicely closed, also the wings, length overall, 6¼ inches, with everything in proportion. Here again the lecturer stated the club standard did not tell them how broad the bird should be, but he thought they had struck the happy medium. The breast, he said, should be the broadest part, tapering to a neat waist, and also to a neat tail. In trying to get this ideal bird he advised us to see the birds are of good colour, even in body colour, not patchy. Beak, legs, and feet clear, as he thought the judges looked more to these qualities than they used to. Next, he again emphasised that we must have birds of position; in fact, he could not lay too much stress on this.

The Belgian Not Favoured.

He did not advocate the beginner starting from Belgian blood, but to get the birds ready made; let the birds have as much of the blood in them as you could get, especially in the cock, but you must not continue to breed from them, as they were bound to deteriorate; still he fully believed you could breed size in your stock for two or three seasons. He was not a believer in continually bringing in new blood, as you would be also continually breeding in defects. We cannot avoid inbreeding to a certain extent, but we must not go too far in this, or we would lose stamina. He strongly advised us to breed with the best birds we had been fortunate in getting, never mind size exactly, as we could allow a little in size, but we must have the quality. As regarding quality of feather, he stated we could improve this by introducing cinnamon blood, nothing would bring it more quickly, and there was nothing better. He also considered it improved the colour more in buffs than in yellow, as you did not see that lovely salmon colour in the latter. His advice to us was if down in feather or colour, do not be afraid to introduce cinnamon blood. As regards breeding for neck, he advised us to use our own discretion, as no one was more able than ourselves, because we were always amongst our own stock. Regarding size, this was a matter which we may improve by double buffing, but we must be very careful, or we were apt to get that loose feather around the waist, which was not needed, also we must not do it too closely, as we would bring out the Lancashire properties, which we also did not want. He strongly advised us to keep those youngsters bred by double buffing, which carried long wings and sides, as they would be worth taking care of.

Made or Marred in the Nest.

Birds were made in the nest, but some fall away afterwards, through not being carefully reared; let them have the show cage as soon as they leave the nest, and a very important point was, don't let them exercise their wings straight away. Put them in flights when ready to moult, then you would have no difficulty in getting them to show themselves to perfection, and in grand position at the proper time. The lecturer here finishing, met with a grand ovation. Having a few minutes to spare the chairman stated that the lecturer would be pleased to answer any questions. The first asked was: Why is it we get more Yorkshires with frills than in Norwich? Answer: The fact of the Norwich being a much stouter bird does away with the frills. Regarding inbreeding, does the lecturer believe in breeding with brother and sister? Answer: Did not believe in it if we have got the stock to do without it, but in any case, would only do it if commencing to fix certain points; all the same, he thought we would lose stamina with it. Does the lecturer advocate double yellowing? Answer: He had never found it satisfactory, as it had a tendency to show openness of feather, and on that account would not advise us to do it. Here time was called, and Mr. Long proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer for giving us so able a lecture. Mr. Fulcher ably seconded, and Mr. Atkinson responded, and so ended one of the most instructive and interesting lectures it has been our lot to listen to. P.S.—Will members and friends please note that in coming to meeting-room they must come to St. Thomas's Old School, Chapel Street entrance.—R. Booth, Press Correspondent.

FELLING F. AND F.S.

Annual meeting and supper held at headquarters, April 19, when 22 sat down to supper, which was kindly provided by our host, Mr. John Earl, who had everything in good order. After supper a very enjoyable evening was spent in harmony. Chair was taken by Mr. W. R. Clark. All fanciers within five miles radius are invited to attend our next meeting.—G. Garbutt, Sec.

LOCHGELLY C.B.S.

Meeting held in the Co-op. Hall, April 18, Mr. Wm. Maver, in the absence of the president, occupied the chair. A letter was read from J. Cordery, sec., West Fife C.B.L., intimating first feather show to be held on July 5, and members accordingly approved of same, and Mr. George (Raith) was appointed as judge for British and Mule Section. The secretary was instructed to write the various Specialist Clubs and apply for their patronage at open show in October. Mr. Bruce was nominated as judge for Yorkshire Section. Mr. R. Guthrie was elected a member.—R. Muir, Sec.

NORTH WALES C.B.S.

Meeting held April 19th, at the Assembly Rooms, Market Street, Carnarvon. Present: Chairman, Mr. James Jones; Hon. Treas., Mr. R. T. Edwards; Messrs. R. Green, J. W. Jones, and R. E. Griffith, Hon. Sec. Letters were read re Vice-Presidents. Sir W. Preece, Mr. W. S. McDowell, and Mr. E. R. Roberts enclosed cheques for £1 1s. Mr. G. H. Stoner accepted. Mr. R. Gwyddenon Davies accepted. The Sec. handed cheques over, etc., to the Hon. Treas., also 10s. 6d. cash. The committee have fixed the date of the first feather members' show for July 5th. Entries close June 28th, and hope that other Secretaries will take note of above date, so that they will not clash. Classification and rules will be on the move at the next meeting at above rooms at 7 p.m. sharp on Thursday. Commitee meetings will be held every Thursday, and not Saturday, till further notice. Will members of the committee kindly bear in mind that they were elected to attend meetings and do a bit of work. I want to see a good roll call at each committee meeting. The show will be on now at once and will be one of the best that has been held. Am doing my best, and have received up to time of writing £4 12s. 6d., and have only been elected six weeks. I have also received a promise of a challenge cup, given by a brother fancier, to be competed for at members' shows only, and to be won twice in succession, or three times in all, by two nominated first feather Canaries only; points to count: first, 7, and downwards. There will be a grand classification, and good money prizes and other specials, so non-members should join at once. Members' card rules are ready. The only thing for a non-member to do is to send his name and address and P.O. for 1s. to me, and he will be open to compete for all specials. Schedule will be ready in about two weeks, and if any of the late members or commitee wish to give a special prize, will they kindly let me know at once and state for what variety; or if anyone would like to support the society with an advertisement, etc., I would feel greatly obliged by hearing from them.—R. E. Griffith, Hon. Sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Meeting held April 12, Mr. Farrer presiding over a good attendance. Mr. Owen, Silksworth, was elected a member. The election of judges for open show, January 16-17, was then gone into, when it was agreed to have Mr. W. A. Cowgill, Bradford, to judge Canaries, and Mr. G. Wilson, Frizington, the remainder. Will be pleased to see a good turn-out of members, or any intending member, at our next meeting, when a discussion on a first feather show will be held.—T. Davison, Sec.

NOTTINGHAM (Permanent) O.S.

Meeting held at Grapes Inn, April 19th. Presentation to our late President, Mr. T. H. V. Hayter. A good number of members turned up. Mr. R. Holmes took the chair. We made one new member. F.F. show was fixed for June 21st. Mr. Holmes said nothing could give him more pleasure than to present our late President (Mr. Hayter) with the grand present that the society was giving on the occasion of his marriage, as a recognition of his valuable services to the society. He said he did not think any fancier deserved it more than Mr. Hayter did for his goodness to the society. He hoped that Mr. and Mrs. Hayter would live long to enjoy their valuable present—a silver-plated teapot. Mr. Hayter responded and said he did not know what he had done to deserve such a present, and he did not know how to thank the members enough for it. He should always do his best for the society as long as he could. He had never known a better set of fanciers than the members of our society. There was always a good spirit between them, and they were always agreeable together. He must thank them again for the grand present, and was sure Mrs. Hayter would be more than pleased with it. He hoped to remain for a long time a member of the society.—J. Bunn, Sec.

BOLDON COLLIERY F. AND F.S.

Meeting held in the Colliery Institute, April 19, Mr. J. Stephenson in the chair. A good muster of members present, which speaks well for our society. It was moved that we alter our date of the first feather show to July 19. Mr A. Hirons was elected assist. sec. Our society now numbers 39 members.—A Widdowfield, Sec.

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

Table show held April 16th, Greenfinches and Hybrids. They proved two very interesting classes, and some of the birds should do well at future shows. Mr. Stevens was a very painstaking judge. A judging competition was held, and proved that there was considerable diversity of opinion. During the business meeting which preceded the show it was decided that we apply for the patronage of the C.C.C., S.Y.C.C., S.N.P.C., and E. and W.B. F.C. at our next annual show. Other varieties were left over for future discussion.—A. S. Treasure, Hon. Sec.

PORTOBELLO C.B.S.

Monthly meeting; a good turnout of members. Agreed to elect Messrs. J. Patterson (Chirnside) and C. Sykes (Musselburgh) judges. The club sec. resigned and was thanked for past services. A presentation afterwards took place in the shape of a writing cabinet to Mr. John Wilson, past treasurer for three years, who is resigning owing to ill-health. Mr. Matthew, the president, made the presentation, recounting Mr. Wilson's services to the club, and Mr. Wilson suitably replied. A programme of music followed the presentation. Jas. Laird was elected sec. in the place of the retiring sec.—James Laird, 1, Ramsey Place, Portobello.

CLYDEBANK C.B.C.

Monthly meeting held at Higgins Hall, April 17. Mr. Chas. Campbell gave a splendid washing exhibition. After showing the members how to hold a bird so as to get at every part without much trouble, he put one bird through the washing. Then he invited any of the members to try their hand, and Messrs. Ferguson and McNicol responded. Mr. Campbell showing them when they were going wrong. After the birds had been washed and placed in a drying cage, the other business was gone into. The committee for revision of rules submitted the proposed new rules, which, with the exception of Rule 12 (remitted back to them) were passed. Mr. Robb moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Campbell for his washing exhibition, which was heartily accorded, after which the meeting closed.—Wm. Kane, Sec.

WESTERN COUNTIES O.S.

Monthly general meeting held at Oddfellows' Hall, Morley Street, Plymouth, April 15. In the absence of the chairmen, Mr. W. G. French presided over a good meeting. Decided to replace challenge cups won outright at last year's nest feather shows, and also to provide a cup for Cinnamons, to be competed for at shows held June 4, June 25, and July 15. A table show of Linnets was held, birds being judged according to standard set out in Cage Birds Annual, 1913. Mr. J. E. Rowe gave a paper on and extracts from an old edition of Hervieux's "Canary Book," which was greatly appreciated by those present. Mr. Rowe mentioned that the book in question was once the property of the late Mr. James Dole, of Plymouth, who was well known to Mule breeders some fifty years ago. Two new members were proposed.—Thos. Pope, Hon. Sec.

COWDENBEATH C.B.S.

Meeting held in the Masonic Arms, April 19. Vice-Pres. A. Simpson in the chair. Mr. Stenhouse (Kelty) was appointed Scotch Fancy judge for next open show. Mr. J. Reid gave a report of the West of Fife League meeting, showing that our society had to appoint a judge for the Border Fancy and A.O.V. classes at their first young bird show on July 5. Mr. J. W. Holmes was selected to judge same. Agreed that the sec. and treas. try to book Drill Hall for open show, Nov. 15. Sec. was instructed to write Old Calabar and Spratts' for terms for show stationery, and also to get estimates from local printers for show printing. He was also instructed to write the Factor of Raith Estate to make arrangements for the ramble, starting from Cardenden at eleven o'clock. All intending going to the ramble, please hand in their names as soon as possible. A hearty vote of thanks to the chairman brought the meeting to a close. Judges for open show, Nov. 15, are as follows:—Scotch Fancies, J. Stenhouse (Kelty); Borders, W. Mossie (Annbank); Norwich, A. Sloan (Glasgow); Yorks, J. Bailey (Bradford); Crests, Mr. Paul (Uphall); Brit., etc., R. Bald (Bathgate).—J. W. Holms, Sec.

METROPOLITAN C.B.A.

Annual general meeting held April 19th, at headquarters. Mr. Martin presided over a good turn-out of members. The auditors gave their report, which showed a cash balance of £2 5s. standing to the account of the society, which was considered very satisfactory after the bad year the club had gone through. Officers elected for the year: Mr. Plank, chairman; Mr. Bouring, treasurer; Mr. F. Moore, 49, Kelmscott Road, Clapham Junction, hon. sec.; Messrs. King, Burgess, Gollop, Cross, Harrison, Walker, Clements, committee. Decided to change the headquarters to Walham Green, and Secretary was instructed to find a suitable room and show hall. All meetings, etc., will be held strictly to advertised time, and all prize money, specials, etc., promptly paid out to members. Three solid silver cups are offered to be won outright during 1913—champion, Novice, and British—with silver medal for runner-up in each section. There are also two 10s. 6d. specials, one champion, one novice, for most points throughout year for rung birds. Subscription is 2s. 6d. per ann., 1s. entrance. The Sec. will be pleased to hear from intending members and will forward full particulars. Membership is open to the United Kingdom. A vote of thanks to the retiring officers for their services during past year closed the meeting.—F. Moore, Hon. Sec.

NOTES BY THE SECRETARY.

The R.S.P.C.A. and its Methods.

We have been engaged during the past two or three weeks in matters referring to the R.S.P.C.A., and its methods. The enquiries made by myself and by the writers of many letters to CAGE BIRDS have produced no answer from Mr. Fairholme, the chief secretary of the society mentioned. We cannot compel him to answer. What we may do, however, is to conclude that there is no answer.

In the correspondence the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds has been more than once mentioned, and this society may not be so well known to readers of CAGE BIRDS as the R.S.P.C.A. While the scope of the R.S.P.C.A. covers cruelty or alleged cruelty, to animals of all kinds, the field of the R.S.P.B. is restricted to matters dealing with birds only, as indicated in its title. It has an official organ, "Bird Notes and News," which is published quarterly, and this magazine confines itself entirely to notes on bird protection in its various forms.

In many respects the magazine is very interesting, and with many of its views all bird lovers will agree cordially. No issue appears, however, without some fulminations against bird-keeping, and in its attacks upon our hobby it generally slips up badly. So far as I have been able to discover, it admits nothing which may be said in favour of keeping birds rationally in captivity, but no statement against bird-keeping is too wild to find admission into its columns.

An Allegation Against a Dealer.

> "May I urge the case of the beautiful little foreign Finches and Waxbills as claimants on our humanity as well as British birds? The common (though equally beautiful) sorts are so cheap that their sufferings and death by the thousand from disease, misery, and cold, are of comparatively little consequence to the dealers. The importation of these wee creatures packed closely, almost as sardines, entails so great an amount of suffering that of those which survive the voyage the greater number perish in a few weeks as the results of the ordeal they have gone through. . . I acknowledge to my shame that I possess an aviary of these lovely and intelligent little birds, but although with me they live under the best conditions and return with delight to their aviary after frequent outings, I should never have started such a thing had I known as much as I do now of the cruelty of the trade. I have had birds sent me from a well-known dealer in the North, packed in a small box without food or water. They arrived dead, of course, and on my indignant remonstrance I was informed that the money should be entered to my credit, as if the trifling pecuniary loss and not the cruelty were the important thing. Although this is an extreme case, birds are almost always sent without water, or at most a tiny piece of sponge which soon goes dry."

Then comes an editorial note as follows:—

> Every bird-lover will echo this pathetic plea for the foreign bird. But England can hardly press for prohibition of export from other countries before she obtains it for her own birds. In the United States, for instance, where no native birds may be caged, and in Canada, it is the English bird which is the foreigner, and the European Larks and Linnets and Goldfinches and Thrushes which are "the unhappy captives in our midst." Miss Marshall Saunders (Halifax, Nova Scotia) says on this subject:—"Of all the foreign birds held in captivity, it has seemed to me that the European Skylark suffers most. I have watched them stage by stage through a long agony till the subject is so painful to me that I cannot bear to think of it. . . It seems to me that if I were a humanitarian in Europe I should strain every nerve to have a law passed, prohibiting the capture of this exquisite, trembling bird for cage purposes."

The letter of "A Somersetshire correspondent" is just a fair sample of the exaggerations used by the people who find the sinews of war for these "humanitarian" societies. Foreign Finches and Waxbills die "by the thousand," according to the letter quoted, "from disease, misery and cold," while they are in the hands of the dealers, and they are so cheap that their deaths entail "comparatively little loss to the dealers."

How Can It Be?

If a thing costs little to a dealer, its selling price is small, and the profit on the sale is small in proportion. If a dealer bought a hundred birds at, say, sixpence each, to sell at, say, ninepence, his total profit, if he lost none at all, would be a hundred threepences. If he lost a third of his stock before he could clear out, he would gain nothing at all, and any further deaths would mean an actual monetary loss on the transaction, without counting his rent, taxes, and shop expenses, and the value of his own labour. How may it possibly be, therefore, that birds may die "by the thousand" with "comparatively little consequence to the dealers?" The editors of these "humanitarian" journals will insert any amount of nonsense of this kind. It is their livelihood so to do. They will not admit into their columns any controverting statements. It is their business not to do so.

"A Somersetshire Correspondent" admits that his, or her, own birds "return with delight to their aviary after frequent outings." Of course they do, and thereby they show their sense. They know that they have food and shelter provided for them and are perfectly happy as they are. They do not "beat out their hearts against the bars of their prison." Thousands upon thousands of birds in this country of ours, in palace and in cottage, are in the same case. They are kept by owners of high degree and of low degree, who love them and tend them, and the birds know it.

Where Punishment was Deserved.

The "well-known dealer in the North" who sent birds to Somersetshire without food and water and packed in such a way that "they arrived dead of course," should be made to suffer for an act of cruelty. From the North to Somersetshire is a long way, and some proper provision should be made for birds sent on such a journey. Isolated cases such as these are quoted with an implied suggestion that such practices are general. The writer of the letter in question admits that the case was an extreme one, which is more than many would have done, but goes on to say that "birds are almost always sent without water, or at most a tiny piece of sponge, which soon goes dry." Of course they are. A bird would take no harm from being kept for a few hours without water; it would take more harm if water were put into its travelling box, only to be upset all over the box by the first porter who handled it. When birds are sent on very long journeys, however, it is usual not to put in the box "a tiny piece of sponge which soon goes dry," but to provide it with a tin drinker, full of water, and to jam into the hole at the top of the drinker a piece of sponge which not only confines the water to the tin, but keeps moist for many hours.

The editorial comment upon this letter once again points out that in the United States and Canada no native birds may be caged. It is the avowed object of the opponents of bird-keeping to get passed an Act of Parliament which would render illegal the keeping of wild birds in England, and what we have to do is to see that such an Act is not passed.

The letter from Halifax quoted by the editor, and reprinted above, is couched in the language with which we have long been familiar. The writer either ignores or is ignorant of the fact that in this wicked country the "exquisite trembling bird," the Skylark is kept in health and contentment by many thousands of bird-keepers, and cases of its living for twenty years in a cage are known. If Skylarks lived in freedom for a tenth part of twenty years they would increase in such number that a systematic war upon the species would be necessary. That they do not so increase is evidence that nine out of every ten that are hatched die within a year in a state of freedom.

They exist in such millions that even the fact that enormous numbers are taken for food makes no appreciable difference in their multitude, and the caging of those which are kept in England in captivity makes such little difference as to be absolutely negligible.

TERMS OF MEMBERSHIP.

PATRONS.—A donation of not less than Ten Guineas in one amount, or an annual subscription of not less than Two Guineas, shall constitute the donor or subscriber a Patron.

VICE PRESIDENTS.—An annual subscription of not less than Half-a-Guinea shall constitute the subscriber a Vice President.

HONORARY LIFE MEMBERS.—The payment to CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE of a legacy of £20 and upwards shall constitute the administrator or executor making the payment an Honorary Life Member. A form of bequest will be sent, post free, on application.

Leaflets setting forth the aims and objects of the LEAGUE will be forwarded, post free, to any reader upon application.

BADGES.

Neat and unobtrusive badges are supplied to members, without any charge beyond their subscriptions as above. The badges may be had either in button form, or mounted in rolled gold in two forms, one as a brooch for ladies or for cycling caps or coat lapel, and the other as a pendant for bracelet or watch-chain. The kind required should be specified clearly.

CERTIFICATES OF MEMBERSHIP, ETC.

Certificates printed in seven colours, and suitable for framing, are supplied at One Shilling each. Each certificate bears an enlarged facsimile of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE badge and Motto, and is signed by the Secretary.

CAGE BIRDS FREE TO PATRONS.

A copy of CAGE BIRDS, the official organ of the LEAGUE, is forwarded to patrons weekly, post free. Members are entitled, if application is made at the time of joining, to a free copy of a sixpenny pamphlet on British Bird Culture, or a similar treatise on Canary and Hybrid Culture.

SEALS AND HEADED NOTEPAPER.

GUMMED SEALS printed in gold and colours in facsimile of the LEAGUE BADGE are supplied for affixing to note paper, postcards, or envelopes. Price eightpence per hundred, fivepence for fifty, post free.

100 Sheets, Two Shillings and sixpence.
250 Sheets, Four Shillings.
500 Sheets, Five Shillings and sixpence.
1,000 sheets, Eight Shillings and sixpence.

154, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

How to become an Associate.

Many readers of CAGE BIRDS have written to say that they would like to join CAGE BIRDS' LEAGUE, but cannot afford the subscription. To meet their wishes we have decided to form, in connection with the LEAGUE, a body of Associates. All we ask of these Associates is that they will promise to give every possible attention to the wants of their birds. And they must induce others to see that their birds are kept happy and contented.

All that the intending Associate has to do is to sign the coupon herewith, get five of his or her friends to sign each a similar coupon, and send the six, together with a penny stamp, to the Secretary of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, who will forward by return an enamelled Button Badge of the LEAGUE. There will be no other charge. NOW, THEN, BIRD LOVERS!—USE YOUR BEST EFFORTS IN THIS SPLENDID CAUSE.

THE BIRD LOVER'S PLEDGE.

I hereby promise to take every care of my feathered pets and to induce others to do the same

TIMELY HINTS.

Two prizes of 2s. 6d. each (cash or our books to value, at option of winners) given weekly to the senders of the two best Hints. All hints must be WRITTEN ON POSTCARDS, with sender's name and address at foot.

A Holder for Shepherd's Purse, etc.

Get a tie-clip, as used for fastening a tie, cost 1d., and tie a loop of twine round the end of the spring. For a wood-topped cage get a picture ring and screw into top of cage, and tie the twine to this. For wire cages, tie the twine to the wire crossing the top. This holder is useful for shepherd's purse, charlock, etc.—J. H. Fraser (Lisburn).

Red Mite in Cracks.

In most of our cages and breeding cages we can find cracks and holes in the wood, and sometimes rough wood, which provide good homes for red mite. To keep this pest down, get ½ pint of methylated spirit, and shake in a bottle with 4ozs. of shellac, until the latter is dissolved. Give the cracks and rough wood a coating of this solution. It will keep red mite away, and it acts as a splendid varnish for cages and dries exceedingly hard.—Wm. Herald (Wolverhampton).

Keeping Mice Away.

The best way to keep mice out of a bird room is to place pieces of camphor in their holes and runs. If this is done the mice will seek a fresh home, as they detest the odour given off by camphor. A pennyworth will last six months, and will not harm the birds.—Burnett (Godalming).

No More Crevices in Cages.

[Winner of Half-Crown Prize.]

Buy a small quantity of gold size from the oil shop and mix whiting with it until it becomes a stiff paste, and then put this in the cracks of your cages before distempering them. You will find this does not crack like putty will, and you can distemper over it immediately, as it soon dries.—R. Spencer, 2, Oakbank Grove, Herne Hill, S.E.

The Usefulness of Sawdust.

If one has a dark bird room, let him put sawdust on the floor; it helps to light up the room. In the breeding season, too, when quietness is invaluable, it deadens the sound when one walks about seeing to the birds' needs. Besides looking clean and tidy, it is healthy, the more so if some Jeyes' Fluid be sprinkled about. It is also better in cages, as it absorbs the bird's droppings, and is much softer to their feet than sand. Of course, a grit tin must be placed inside. In short, if you use sawdust in your bird room, it will smell sweeter, and your birds will be healthier.—A. Ward (Deeping St. James).

Keeping the Claws Short.

To keep the claws of caged birds short and thus save the time and risk of cutting them, fasten a thin strip of coarse sand paper on the underside of the perches. This is best fixed with a thin glue (or the "white" of a raw egg, in fact, will answer the purpose well). This I find of great service.—E. McPherson (Kingston-on-Thames).

To Stop Cats Worrying Birds.

I think a lot of harm is done by cats sitting watching through aviary windows. A good idea is to get some white paint, and thin it down with turps, making a white liquid. Stipple same on outside or inside of window, then birds will not see cats, and cats cannot see birds. It will not be washed off by rain, but can be got off by rubbing with rag dipped in turps.—W. Southgate, 1, Hardy Road, Parkstone, Dorset.

The Ideal Slide or Drawboard.

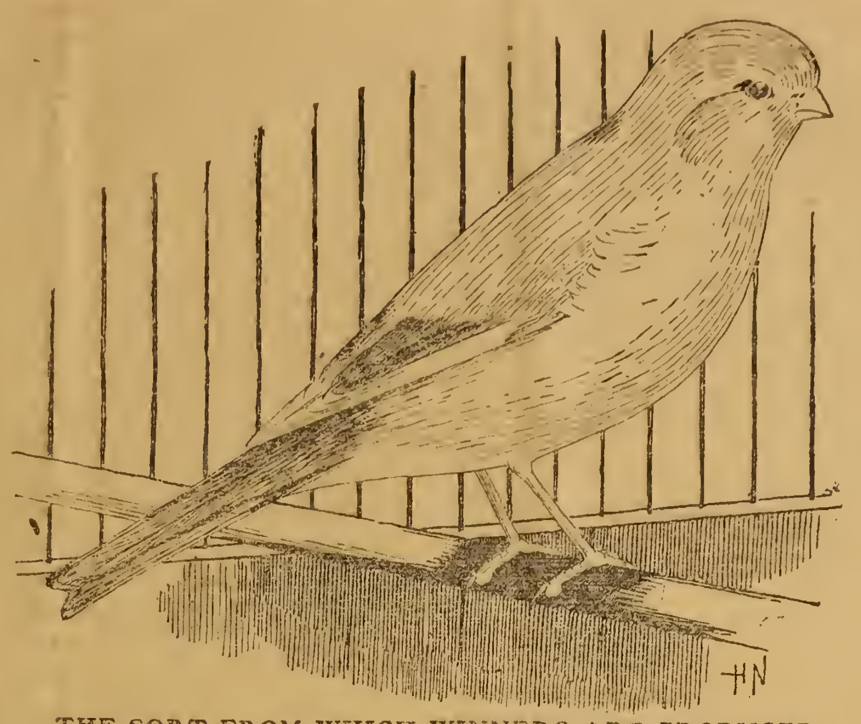
Having made your sand tray of white wood, stain it with brown umber (or any coloured stain you fancy). Then give it two coats of ordinary stone varnish, or light oak. A marble like surface will be the result. When cleaning out the cage, the dirt should be got off first, then put the tray under the water tap.—Alex. Hewitt, 56, Hamilton Street, Govan, Glasgow.

Read the Query Columns.

From now onwards the novice should studiously follow the "Questions and Answers" columns of Cage Birds. I have found it a good plan to take cuttings from this column and paste them in a notebook for easy reference. Cage cracks should be closed up—putty is useful for this—and the insides of cages either enamelled or painted. I find that paraffin thoroughly applied with a brush to obstinate cracks generally minimises the red mite pest. All perches should be thoroughly scraped, and soaked in paraffin.—Q.-M.-S. J. H. Beale (Royal Engineers).



THE SORT FROM WHICH WINNERS ARE PRODUCED.

Our artist has depicted a Norwich Plainhead which would be an ideal stock bird and no mean performer on the show-bench. It has a grand head, the best of wings, a neat tail, and a good chest, while its markings denote that it has plenty of the valuable "green blood," and are found just in the right place.

SUCCESS OF THE GATESHEAD APPEAL.

Society Now Out of Trouble.

It is with great pleasure that we receive and publish the appended letter from Mr. Curry, secretary of the Gateshead C.B.S., notifying us that the financial help so readily afforded by their fellow-fanciers has placed the members in the happy position of being able to pay off the crop of debts resulting from the Society's unfortunate experience at the last annual show and the more unfortunate experience in the police court. We are sure that all bird-lovers will join us in expressing a wish that its future career may be plain sailing in untroubled waters. We should like to add on our own behalf an expression of thanks to those who have so generously supported the appeal made in our columns.

The Secretary's Letter.

Newcastle.
April 22, 1913.

Sir,—A committee meeting of the Gateshead Society was held on the 21st inst, when the financial position of the club was gone into. I am very pleased indeed to tell you that with the money in hand, and the subscriptions sent through your appeal in Cage Birds, we shall be able to clear off all our liabilities, and still have a little balance over. The committee instructed me to write and ask you to be kind enough to close the subscription list, and to accept their best thanks for the noble way Cage Birds and our brother-fanciers have helped us to clear our debts.

You might please include in your list £1 1s. 6d. collected by Mr. F. Hammond at the Council meeting of the Yorkshire Union, by the kind permission of the chairman and delegates, who allowed him to pass the hat round amongst them. Mr. Ramsden has sent me 12 1lb. tins of his famous tasteless pepper, to be sold at 2s. per tin, the money to go to the fund. Also please make Mr. Goodman's amount up to £1 10s. (i.e., 11s. 3d. more), the result of sale of his "Filup" Feeders. Mr. Butler, of Stanley, has sent 5s.

I would like to heartily thank all who have helped us in our time of need. There is no doubt that had it not been for their kindly help, things would have gone very badly with us. We extend to one and all our sincerest thanks. It is such actions as these that unite fanciers in the bonds of friendship.

W. Curry,
Secretary Gateshead C.B.S.

Cage Birds' fund now stands as follows: Amount previously acknowledged, £6 15s. 4d.; Mr. T. E. Wheatley (Belfast), 2s. 6d.; Deal Walmer and Dis. F.A., 5s.; West Stanley C.B.S., 5s.; W. Connell (Belfast), 2s. 6d.; total, £7 10s. 4d. In addition, there are the sums mentioned last week (per Messrs. Curry and Greason), £3 4s. 7d., and the additional sums mentioned by Mr. Curry this week, viz., £1 17s. 9d., bringing the grand total to £12 12s. 8d.

The secretary of Stockton-on-Tees C.B.S. had notified us that the hat would be sent round at their meeting to be held on May 1st.

The Young Naturalist.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given weekly for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution, one star the runners-up.

*The False Alarm.

Every morning I put a heap of table scraps on the garden for the birds. The Starlings are generally first, and will drive away any other bird that comes to feed. A Blackbird that is rather afraid of the Starlings, after being driven away so often, has found it can frighten them away by giving a shrill cry of alarm. This it does often, and when the Starlings have flown away, it hops about the food picking out the choice morsels, and uttering a satisfied "chuck-chuck-chuck" all the time.—Sent by J. H. Shirley (age 10), 14, High Street, Sutton, Keighley, Yorks.

The Sparrow's Toilet.

  A dainty little dipping;
A dart into a quiet nook,
  With all his feathers dripping.

A little shake, a little tweak,
  To stir up every feather;
A pretty preening with his beak,
  To lay them altogether.

A stretch of wings, some fluffy shakes,
  A flash—he's flown away;
That is how the Sparrow makes
  His toilet for the day.

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

J. C. BARNES, 113, Northfield Road, Walkley, Sheffield. Judge of all varieties of cage birds. Long practical experience. Terms moderate.

*Knowing Chaffinches.

Some people think it cruel to keep wild birds. But I do not think so, because my father had two hen Chaffinches which we had kept for some time. One day father let them fly, but they did not go far from us. Every day the two birds came to the cage to feed, and have their water. When they have had their feed, they sit in the cage, and sometimes try to get in the house window.—Sent by Edna Jordan (age 13), 1, Providence Cottages, Oakdene Road, Brockham, near Betchworth.

THE FOREIGN BIRD CLUB.

Reception, Dinner, and Conference.

The above was held at The Inns of Court Hotel on April 17th. The following members and friends were present:—The Countess of Winchelsea, Major Perreau, Rev. G. H. Raynor, Dr Amsler, Mr. W. A. Bainbridge, Miss Clare, Mr. C. Harris, Miss Harris, Mr. J. S. Marriner, Mr. R. Montague, Mr. Otto Puck, Mr. Wesley T. Page, Mr. W. T. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Schluter, Mr. A. Silver, Mrs. Stella Storey, Miss Storey, Mr. S. M. Townsend, Mr. H. Willford, Mr. R. J. Watt, and Miss Sargeant, Mr. Sydney Williams, Mr. and Miss Williams. A reception was held from 6.30 to 7 o'clock, followed by dinner, which was well served.

Major Perreau presided, supported by The Countess of Winchelsea, and Rev. G. H. Raynor. The Chairman proposed the toast of "The King," which was loyally honoured. Dr. Amsler proposed "Success to the F.B.C." Mr. Wesley Page responded.

After the dinner a conference was held, presided over by Rev. G. H. Raynor who spoke briefly of the subject of "Parrots and their Sagacity." Major Perreau gave an account of his recent importation of rare Indian birds; Mr. H. Willford exhibited some of his photographs of bird life; Mr. S. Williams gave a short address on "Foreign birds kept in cages;" and Mr. W. T. Rogers spoke on "My Garden Aviary." Mr. S. M. Townsend representing the exhibitors' section of the club, handed round the silver cup, won this year by Mr. F. Howe. Mr. R. J. Watts spoke on "Common foreign birds for Exhibition," and Mr. Wesley T. Page closed the conference by general remarks upon the subjects that had been discussed during the evening. Mr. and Miss Williams ably rendered some music during the evening.

A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. W. T. Rogers for the arrangements which had resulted in a very happy and profitable evening being spent, and all hoped that it might be repeated upon some subsequent occasion.

Twitterings.

At the show of the Maidstone F. and F.S., November 7th, the cage bird section will be judged by Mr. C. A. House.

Secretary G. Havver writes that the Blaydon and Dis. C.B.S. has again secured the patronage of the Northern Lizard Club for its annual show.

At the next meeting April 30, of the Uddingston and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. J. Cosgrove, hon. sec., judges will be selected for the forthcoming open show.

Would the person who borrowed electros from us some time ago please return them at once, write Messrs. James Dean and Son (Liverpool). We have mislaid name and address of borrower, and cannot find it at the moment.

I was very pleased to see the lifelike sketch of my natural-colour winning Plainhead at Norwich Show in Cage Birds Annual, writes Mr. G. Brown. The latest hints in the Annual on the treatment of ailing birds are alone worth the 6d. charged, even to an old stager.

We have received a good number of applications from Southern fanciers to join us, and there is time to hear from others before our next meeting, April 30th; we shall welcome their names to submit for election.—King and Joiner, Hon. Secs., Portsmouth and Southern Counties' C.B.S.

Would you kindly announce in Cage Birds, writes Mr. F. Moore, 49, Kelmscott Road, Clapham Junction, S.W., that I have been elected hon. sec. of the Metropolitan C.B.A., and all correspondence concerning same should be addressed to me. We have £2 5s. cash balance in hand, notwithstanding the disastrous year the Society has had.

Secretary J. R. Chestney writes that Cramlington C.B.S. has secured Messrs. R. Tindale, Newcastle; A. Hay, Tweedmouth; and A. Holden, Gateshead, as judges for its annual show, Nov. 22. These gentlemen are well-known judges, and it is anticipated that entries will exceed previous years. Exhibitors kindly note date of show, and send large entries.

At a meeting of the Inverness O.A., recently held, writes Mr. R. Duncan, reporter, Mr. John Connachie, Craiglea, Percival Road, was appointed sec. in room of Mr. T. Sutherland, who resigned. Mr. McLeay, Kirkintilloch, Mr. Ross, Forres, and Mr. Anderson, Forres, kindly agreed to judge at our annual show, Nov. 19, in the Music Hall. Would exhibitors and friends kindly note new secretary's address?

Will you kindly bring to the notice of fanciers through the medium of Cage Birds, writes Mr. S. Lindsay, Hon. Sec., Avon Rath, Birtley, Co. Durham, that a meeting of the Birtley and Dis. C.B.S. will be held at the Station Hotel, Birtley, on April 26th, at 7 prompt. Any fancier desirous of becoming a member will he kindly communicate with me, or we will be pleased to welcome him at the above meeting.

Societies desiring the patronage of the specialist clubs at their 1913 shows should apply as follows: National Green Marked Y.C.C., Mr. E. Clegg, Victoria School House, Dewsbury; Norwich Plainhead Club, Mr. F. Cunliffe, 19, Lark St., Burnley (closing date, May 10); National British Bird and Mule Club, Mr. J. P. Carr, 45, Overdale Rd., S. Ealing, W.; Southern Norwich P.C., Mr. F. S. Matthes, 34, Rotherhithe New Rd., S.E.; Northern Yorks C.C., Mr. R. Tindale, 141, Stanton St., Newcastle-on-Tyne; Cinnamon Marked Y.C.C., Mr. R. Garnett, 8, Leeds Rd., Windhill, Shipley.

To Society Secretaries, Advertisers and Correspondents generally.

Will all correspondents, and secretaries and officials of societies in particular, please note that CAGE BIRDS now goes to press on Wednesday afternoon so that all matter for publication in our issue of the same week MUST reach us on TUESDAY TO BE CERTAIN OF INCLUSION, or first post Wednesday at latest.

It would much facilitate our work if Secretaries and others would kindly write out their club reports, notices, etc., in the style in which they see them printed. Write on ONE SIDE ONLY of each sheet of paper used.

Secretary G. Ford, Radcliffe and Dist. C.B.S., writes that Mr. Schofield, of Heywood, will judge at the first feather show held in the Conservative Club, first Saturday in July.

Kindly publish in Cage Birds, writes Mr. W. Broadbridge, sec. pro. tem., Sittingbourne and Dist. C.B.S., we have fixed our annual show for Nov 12 and 13th. We are anxious not to clash with any other society.

We have received a sample of Messrs. Goodman and Co.'s "Filup" feeder for young birds. The 1913 pattern is particularly good, and will be hard to beat as a handy and excellent implement for hand-feeding young birds of almost any kind, but Canaries and Hybrids in particular. Don't overlook the advertisement in this week's issue.

Will you kindly announce, writes Mr. M. Cook, hon. sec. Boscombe and Dis. C.B.A., that we have fixed Jan. 13 and 14th for our first annual show? Judge, Mr. J. Robson. We are still increasing our membership, having over forty members and a few pounds in the bank, after holding a members' show, at which eighteen members staged 112 birds. We have already two cups promised, which is not bad for the first year's working. Meetings second Tuesday in each month; subscription 2s. 6d.

OBITUARY.

I sincerely regret to inform you, writes Mr. E. J. Davies, treasurer, Cardiff C.B.S., that Mr. E. Thomas, our secretary, has just been bereaved of his father, who peacefully passed away at the age of 78. Though age has kept him somewhat in the background of late, he was earlier in life a breeder, and a keen judge of the "Bird O' Circle," frequently scoring at some of the biggest fixtures, including the Palace; he remained a fancier to the last, and to his relatives and friends we extend our deepest sympathy.

Also one of our oldest members, Mr. Alf. Harrington, another Scotch Fancy expert, has had the sad misfortune to lose his youngest daughter after a trying illness at the early age of twenty-six. He also has the entire sympathy of all our members in his hour of trouble.

I was very pleased to see in your last issue the commencement of another series of articles on the Roller Canary by Mr. Tomlinson. Last season I followed the method of training given in one of his former articles with much success, so am naturally pleased to see another contribution from this gentleman.—W. H. Shepley (Clapham Common).

I have taken Cage Birds regularly for the last three years, and with this and "Cage Birds Annual," "Canary Breeding for Beginners," "Foreign Birds" (by Wesley T. Page) and the "British Bird Manual" have not needed to get much other information, as these, combined with average common sense, appear to be all that is necessary to enable us to keep birds healthy and in good condition. I do not expect to make a profit out of my hobby, but I get as much pleasure out of my birds for a few shillings a week as I do out of some other amusements costing considerably more.—A. R. Luckly (Brighton).

The Attractive Greenfinch.

Some people do not care for the song either of the Greenfinch or the Hedge Sparrow, but both of them have a certain charm to true lovers of wild bird life. The Greenbird's song is best just before the breeding season, before he has commenced to add the long drawn out zee to his song. Some notes at that time are quite mellow and rich, and compares favourably with many a less common species. In his natural haunts he is always an attractive bird, in spite of his being so numerous.

The Cat and Scottish Law.

In an action brought in Hamilton, Scotland, by an owner of pigeons to recover damages against the owner of a cat on account of pigeons killed, the decision of the Sheriff seems strangely at variance with the views of our own magistrates. We have always been under the impression that an action for damages would succeed if the aggrieved person could prove that the cat had been previously guilty, to the knowledge of its owner, of destroying birds in private ownership, and that if a person shot a trespassing cat instead of taking legal action the owner of the cat could sue him for damages. In Scotland the opposite would appear to be the case, for Sheriff Shennan who tried the action decided that "it was preposterous to hold that the cat owner was under the obligation to so control it as to prevent it from killing birds. The true view seemed to be that those who kept birds which were liable to be the prey of hunting animals, must protect them against the dangers to which they were thus exposed. The pigeon owner must guard against hawks, rats, weasels, or such animals, as well as against cats, and if he caught a cat 'in flagrante delicto' he had the right to treat it as he would a rat or weasel."

"I am pleased to state that I have disposed of over 50 Glucke Rollers through two advertisements in your valuable paper."—C. EVANS (Aberystwith).

"Please don't put my advertisement in any more. I have now plenty of birds. People have sent birds without deposit. I had no idea I would have so many."—E. ROBERTS (Liverpool).

"The results from advertising last season in CAGE BIRDS and CAGE BIRDS' ANNUAL were most satisfactory, orders coming in from all over the world."—GOODMAN and CO. (The "Filup" Feeder, Bedford).

"Please stop my advertisement, having sold all that I intended to sell this season. I have some orders now I cannot supply. This speaks well for the circulation of CAGE BIRDS. I may say I have had orders from over 500 miles from London."—G. TETIN (Forest Gate).

"Will you thank through the medium of your valuable paper CAGE BIRDS, all those that answered my advt. in your issue of the 12th inst? They are too numerous to reply to individually; I have answered all those that sent stamps."—F. C. DICKENS (Northampton).

A regrettable printer's error occurred in last week's advertisement of Mr. R. Kremner's well-known Canary Rings, namely "1—200, 2s." The price should have read, "1—100, 2s."

The Crystal Palace 1914 Show.

We hear from Mr. Ramsden that the next National show will be held on Feb. 6 to 10, 1914, and will be run as an absolutely independent show, free from the official patronage of any specialist club. The difficulties in the way of holding the show from Thursday to Monday were considered by the Crystal Palace authorities to be insurmountable.

Chiffchaff Sings Amid the Snow.

Mr. George Potts writes from Broseley to the "Newport and Market Drayton Advertiser," on April 1st:—"There was snow on the ground early yesterday morning; yet a Chiff-chaff was holding forth for a long time close to my bedroom window between 7 and 8 a.m.!" A Chiff-chaff was also heard singing gaily in a garden at Bayston Hill early on the mornings of the 26th, 27th, and 28th March."

Rook Builds on Telephone Pole.

There is a stimulating spice of novelty in the conduct of a pair of Rooks at Pocklington (Yorks) who have just raised a difficult question of State rights. These birds have constructed their nest in a most ingenious fashion on the upper arm of a high telephone pole. The pole carries a number of wires, and stands in the yard of the Buck Hotel, Market Place, one of the busiest and most frequented parts of the town. There are several strong rookeries in the outskirts, but the occupants have not disturbed the founders of the new settlement, where the female is sitting close on her eggs. The construction of the nest has in no way interrupted the working of the telephones, and up to the present no application has been made to Mr. and Mrs. Rook for "coming on to the system."

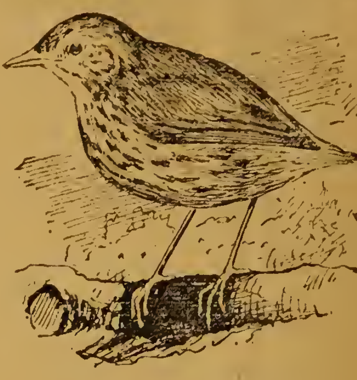
Wild-Bird Life.

The First Broods.

Although the weather has been none too genial, and we have only had occasional stray gleams of sunshine, the days are lengthening, and the early songsters commence to "salute the morn" soon after 4 a.m. Wild bird life is steadily but slowly advancing, the migrants are gradually drifting over, and the resident birds are mostly nesting, although a pair here and there are still seeking the right spot. The Blue Tit is just now a great frequenter of the gardens, and may be seen at almost any time among the branches of the fruit trees. We gave him credit for doing good, hoping that in his gambols among the blossom he is seeking some form of insect life that would later on do damage to the crop. Sometimes in his quick fleeting from branch to branch, he sends down quite a shower of broken blossom, a veritable fall of snow. Tennyson says "See how they tumble the blossoms, the mad little Tits"; and to see them sometimes dash about, one could almost imagine them having taken leave of their senses, especially when a pair are together.



A YOUNG SONG THRUSH.

As usual some precocious pairs have managed to bring off their young ones in safety, although these early ventures run far greater risks than the later ones. The writer has seen young Sparrows, Thrushes, Blackbirds, and Starlings out of the nest. These birds must be particularly hardy, but how they must feel the change from the warm nest to the open air when they first venture forth! We found quite a baby Thrush roosting in a plum tree in the garden; it was quite in the open without the slightest shelter. It was a cold moonlight night, which was followed by a sharp frosty morning. The little chap was only on a level with one's head, he was sound asleep; evidently quite tired out with his first day in the big world. Our walking about, talking, and thoroughly examining him, did not wake him. We were somewhat undecided about moving him to safer quarters until the morning, but any way we left him where he was, hoping that the big Wood Owl in the elms would be far too busy among the colony of rats along the old park fence to notice him. These young birds run enormous risks and undoubtedly the mortality among them is far greater than most of us imagine, but Name Nature is so liberal in her productions, that there is always a big supply, and enough of each species survive to continue the race.

Close Pals.

Just now Starlings are always in pairs, and particularly attached to each other. They take wing together, and are, in fact, inseparable companions. They are bustling birds when feeding, and if one lags behind (delayed by a specially choice morsel), it will race hard to catch up with its mate.

The Thrush's "Cockney" Song.

"Observant Ornithologist," when sending to "Punch" a rendering in words of the music of the Song Thrush, says that his garden is situated within the Metropolitan ten-mile radius, where the birds sing with a slightly Cockney accent.

"Swank! Swank! Swank! Swank! Swank!
Get yer beak clipped!
Tut! Tut! Tut! Tut! Tut! Tut!
Silly fool! Silly fool! Silly fool! Silly fool!
Cheese it, do! Cheese it, do! Cheese it, do!
Naughty! Naughty! Naughty! Naughty!
Pip, pip! Pip, pip! Pip, pip!
For you to eat? For you to eat? For you to eat?
I don't think! I don't think! I don't think!
Cool cheek! Cool cheek! Cool cheek!
I fill the bill—I'm It! I fill the bill—I'm It!
I fill the bill—I'm it!

SOMETHING ABOUT MY NIGHTINGALES.

BY
W. E. TESCHEMAKER
B.A. (Teignmouth).

England's "Philomel" and the Continental Sprosser are both dealt with by our author, who also chats interestingly of some Nightingale lovers of long ago.

A YEAR or two since I had the pleasure of writing for Cage Birds a little sketch of the home-life of the Nightingale during the breeding season, with some particulars of Seventeenth Century methods of keeping this species in captivity, as compared with those of the present day. This brought me some interesting suggestions, and some friendly criticism to which I shall refer a little later on. For the most part, however, I propose to deal to-day with the Nightingale as a singing bird, and also, as before, to try to give you a little peep into the past; for (to me) there is nothing more interesting than to look back through the long vista of the years and learn how the very early aviculturists, whose names have long since been forgotten, and whose bodies have for centuries been lying in nameless graves, treated some particular species, what they thought about it, and what value they assigned to it.

Our excellent Editor has several times tried to induce me to write what he calls an instructive article, but for three good reasons, I have never accepted his kind invitation. In the first place I am just a learner, and therefore not competent to instruct others; secondly, in my humble opinion (which I simply give for what it is worth), aviculture cannot be taught—each must climb for himself the long and slippery ladder which leads to success, resting assured that, with a stout heart and courage to persevere to the end, he will reach the top-rung at last; thirdly, I notice that sometimes an aviculturist is so pleased with his success in climbing that he is tempted to turn round, long before he has reached the top, and ask the world to notice what a lofty position he has reached, whereupon someone else is frequently tempted to give the ladder a little shake and down comes the aviculturist with a flop! Now that could not happen to a learner, for, if anyone pulls him down, he has only a few rungs to fall, and, being so accustomed to falling, he will come down lightly. A learner, therefore, I shall remain until the end of the chapter. If, however, any reader can extract for himself from the following narrative any suggestions which may be of use to him, I shall be very pleased indeed.

"A Nightingale Guaranteed to Sing!"

My early efforts to bring a Nightingale into full song were far from successful. My Nightingales flourished exceedingly, but they sang not at all. This was partly, I think, because I then kept hand-reared birds, and partly because I had not grasped the fact that the song of this species, both in captivity and in freedom, is essentially competitive. But one day my hopes were raised to the highest pitch of expectation, for I was promised "A Nightingale guaranteed to sing!"

Let me tell you how that came about. A friend of mine married a German lady who was born in Hamburg, and whose father was a very keen aviculturist, and particularly interested in Nightingales. This lady used often to chaff me about my want of success, and tell me that the Germans could always make a Nightingale sing, and moreover she could well remember how beautifully they used to sing in her father's house, and, further, that the German dealers were so honest that if they guaranteed a bird to be a singer you might be absolutely certain that it would sing. Of course, I said that Hamburg must be very near to Paradise, that I should like to live there for ever and ever, and all the other nice things that I could think of; the result was that I was promised a real German songster as a present. Nor did my friend's wife forget her promise. The next time she went to see her relatives in Hamburg she walked into a bird-shop, and explained that she wished to buy a singing bird for a friend in England who would not believe that the Germans could make Nightingales sing whenever they wished. "Well, Madam," said the polite dealer, "I have here two Nightingales; one will very likely sing, but the other I guarantee to sing. I recommend you to buy them both."

In due course I received two little cages. One contained a dead Nightingale, and the other—a Pekin Robin. But, I must say that the Pekin was a beauty—one of the larger race and a good singer. As a rule the song of this species is just a single bar, consisting of eight notes repeated over and over again, but it is very powerful and mellow. I find that one can get as much Pekinese music as one can possibly want by placing one male in an outdoor aviary and another in a room with an open window. They will then sing one against the other from morn to dewy eve. But the caged bird requires careful watching. As long as he keeps moving I know that he is in good trim, but, should he look pensive, I snatch him up and turn him out for a fortnight in the coldest outdoor aviary, and keep him on short commons. He can then be brought in again, repeating the outdoor treatment when necessary. In this way he will live for years. In an outdoor aviary he seems generally very ready to nest, and, if you have made friends with him, he will let you take as many photos as you like of his nesting operations; in fact, there is no more delightful aviary bird than the charming little Babbler which the dealers are so fond of calling the "Pekin Nightingale."

A Talented Sprosser.

My first singing Nightingale worthy of mention was a Sprosser—a remark which sounds rather Irish, but which is strictly correct. He commenced to sing immediately after the moult, and continued without any intermission whatever until his next autumnal moult, which must be almost, if not quite, a record. I succeeded in getting him to sing to command, and he would do this even in an outdoor aviary, into which he was sometimes turned for the benefit of his health. He commenced to sing again after his second moult, but there came an unlucky day in the following spring when I had to make room in the bird-room for a number of Softbills which I had just received from abroad, and, in order to do so, I turned the Sprosser into a division of the garden aviary which had no shelter. As bad luck would have it, a cold frosty night followed a warm day, and from that day the glorious song of my Sprosser was hushed for ever.

He went into a soft moult from which he recovered, but he could never recover his song. It was a most pathetic thing to hear the poor bird attempt to sing when he was asked to do so. He would utter a few notes and then stop and look at me in a reproachful kind of way, as though asking why I had by my folly thus ruined his splendid voice of which he used to be so proud, and at last he got on my nerves to such an extent that I was glad to exchange him to the value of about half-a-sovereign. This experience seems to suggest that if one has such a priceless thing as a singing Nightingale one should regard it as being worthy of the highest treasure, and on no account expose it to such a risk as moving it from a warm room to a cold aviary.

A Present from Italy.

My next Nightingale worthy of mention was a gift, and a valuable gift too. It is just possible that some of my readers may remember the previous article which I wrote on this subject, in which I quoted a very interesting account written by Lieut.-Col. Momber, of a Nightingale which engaged in a singing contest with a wild rival in the garden of a Swiss Hotel. Shortly after this was written Col. Momber's favourite died, and was replaced by another, but alas, before the latter came into song, its master had passed away to that land from which no traveller returns. Mrs. Momber very kindly gave me several of her late husband's birds, including this one. It was arranged that they were to be brought from Italy as far as London by her son, and in this way "Anthony" (as Mrs. Momber called him) safely reached me.

Anthony's history has been closely linked with tragedy. First, his master died after only a few hours illness, and, barely a month later, Mrs. Momber's only son, who had brought Anthony over from Italy for me, died suddenly at Cambridge University. He has been unfortunate himself too, for at various times he has broken both a wing and a leg, and yet he is sound and well to-day, though he has lived with me for three years, and must be quite five years old. I have changed his name to "Antony" because, for an Italian Nightingale, the name of "the noble Roman" (as Shakespeare called him) seems more appropriate. Antony is somewhat deficient in the beautiful long-drawn bass tours of our English Nightingales, but he has a wonderful variety of high tours, and he is the only representative of his species which, with me, has ever sung in a cage at night.

An Experiment in "Meating Off."

Shortly after Antony came into my possession, I came across a small consignment of Sprossers at a London dealer's, one of which I purchased. I was also shown a remarkably fine Nightingale which had just been brought in by a catcher, and had not as yet made acquaintance with any of those dreadful compounds sometimes most quaintly termed "insectivorous mixtures." Now shortly before this Mr. Jackson, of Bawtry, the well-known exhibitor, had most kindly given me some Softbills, and in return I had given him a Nightingale which, however, was not an exhibition specimen. When I saw this grand bird I thought of Mr. Jackson, purchased it and popped it in with the Sprosser in one of those small travelling cages, usually retailed at ninepence. Normally, the Sprosser is both a longer and a much bulkier bird, but this exceptional Nightingale was actually larger than the Sprosser.

"PHILOMEL—THE POET OF THE SPRING."

Perch'd on the circling moss, the listening throng

That Deadly Complaint—Nothing to do!

We have all heard the "experts" discourse on the traditional difficulties of "meating off" this species—the darkened cage, hand-feeding, and all the rest of it, so perhaps it may interest you to hear how these two birds were treated. Please remember that the Sprosser had as yet seen nothing but fresh ants' eggs, and his companion in captivity had only just left the trapper's hands. They were kept for two days in one small cage in a bedroom of a London Hotel, fed on a mixture of gentles and mealworms, and allowed to fight as much as they liked. Then they were brought down to Devonshire—a distance of 200 miles—and, little more than a week later, the Nightingale was sent by rail all the way to Yorkshire, where Mr. Jackson told me he arrived in good condition, and sang a little the same summer. But I can go one better than this. A couple of years since a hen Sprosser was caught early in May, either in Hungary or Russia, forwarded to Berlin, and then sent to me—a distance of more than one thousand miles by rail and steamer. By the last day of May it had built in my aviary a nest, and laid four eggs, which it subsequently hatched, rearing four fine young birds. Two suggestions present themselves; one, that probably many of the losses in "meating off" freshly caught birds are due to the fact that they are taken away from a life of immense activity, and vivid interest, and shut up in a darkened prison, where they die from that most deadly of all complaints—nothing to do; two, that a difficulty is often made greater by fussing about it. There is an old saying that "if you do not trouble trouble, trouble will not trouble you."

Questions and Answers.

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaints written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence,, otherwise their letters will not receive attention. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Childrens' Fund (London).

(9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 151, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

THE following gentlemen represent Cage Birds staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

Note.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

ARE THEY DIFFERENT VARIETIES? (M. M. J.).—The St. Andreasburg and Hartz Rollers are not different varieties, but one and the same variety, which vary only in quality of song. The Hartz is a less accomplished singer, having failed to absorb a large measure of vocal talent during tuition, or it may be a bird which has had no musical training.

NOT SUNG YET (G.T.J.W.).—My opinion is that two young Canaries hatched last May, and apparently in good health, which have not yet commenced to sing, are in all probability two hens. I note you say they are two males, but perhaps it is the wish that is father to the thought. Keep them in separate cages in bright and healthful surroundings. In addition to the usual seed diet, give each half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with about half its bulk of a mixture of equal parts maw, sesame, and gold of pleasure mixed in it, every second day for a fortnight. On the alternate days add twenty drops of whisky, ten of lemon juice, and as much sulphate of soda as will cover a threepenny-piece to the drinking water. Give each two crisp young dandelion leaves daily. If they show no signs of coming in song in, say, a fortnight, I think you had better change your opinion about their gender.

DOMESTIC BROILS (J. C. Newell).—Has it not been written that the course of true love never runs smoothly? Anyway, it is a common thing for the hymeneal joys of Canaries to be profusely punctuated by free fights. But, seriously, it is quite a common ocurrence for a pair of birds in good breeding condition to behave as yours are doing when first put together ,and these "scraps" continue with more or less frequency until the hen is getting forward with the nest, when the cock cools down, and by the time the hen begins to sit becomes a quiet, staid, and sober benedict. It is very rarely indeed that any serious damage is done by this belligerent courtship, and it is frequently the prelude to successful results. Therefore you need have no anxiety whatever about the birds' behaviour. By the time this appears they will probably be better employed.

STAGNATING (P. H. F.).—Yes, I think it is largely a case of waiting patiently for a little while. The recent snap of bitter cold, combined with the removal of the birds to a colder room, would tend to put them back a bit, but as soon as mild weather returns they will probably go ahead again. Give them a nest pan, if they have not one already, and just a small tuft of cow hair or moss to play with until the hen is ready to start building in earnest. As regards the hen paying attention to one of the other cocks, if, as I assume, you have moved only the pair that are mated to the other room, and left the favoured cock in the kitchen, this matter will come all right when the hen gets keen on nesting. You are quite right in not mating brother and sister, with no special object for doing so. Continue feeding the pair as advised for backward birds until the hen goes to nest.

TWO CRESTED HENS (K. S.).—(1) I do not think this bird has enteritis, but that its chief trouble is of digestive origin, and most likely largely due to your feeding, which is far from being correct. Give it a staple diet of plain dry canary seed—i.e., do not soak this seed—and until the bird eats this freely give separately each day a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut sprinkled with maw seed. When bird eats the seed freely, give this bread and milk only every second day for the remainder of a month. In addition to the bread and milk, give half a teaspoonful of scalded summer rape every second day, and on the alternate days a morsel of banana, varied now and again with a leaf of crisp young dandelion. Keep cage floor strewn with clean gritty sand. Offer the bath only during bright mild weather. In the drinking water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much sulphate of soda as will cover a threepennypiece every second day for a week, and afterwards give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight. (2) This may possibly be a congenital affection to which Crests, especially when bred double-crest to a large extent, are rather subject. In addition to the seed diet, give a morsel of bread and milk slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur and sprinkled with soft sugar every third day for a month, and add to the water six drops of dandelion juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a threepennypiece twice a week for a month. Dust the bare skin liberally twice a week with boracic acid. Use a tiny wad of wool for the purpose, and dab it on gently to get some powder to adhere to the skin.

COCK NOT SINGING (L. J. L.).—There is no cause whatever for anxiety. It is quite natural for the cock to cease singing more or less from the time the hen starts nesting in earnest, and he usually becomes quite staid and sober when the hen begins to sit. Judging from what you say I think your prospects are rather rosy. Commence giving egg food when young are due to hatch, according to instructions in "Canary Breeding for Beginners," and here's luck to you.

A POOR START (Desmond).—The exploits of this hen certainly come under the definition often termed a "broken eggery." Fortunately such cases are not bound to be repeated with future clutches, and it is quite likely your hen may do better next time. Leave the pair together. Add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea to the water for three days, and feed the same as advised to "H. Tite" in this issue until the hen goes to nest again, which may be very soon.

BARE IN BACK (W. J. A.).—See that bird is not troubled with insect pests. Keep in a fairly equable temperature, in a well-ventilated, bright, and healthful place. Allow it to bathe freely whenever weather is mild. In addition to the staple seed diet give a morsel of bread and milk, slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur and sprinkled with maw seed every third day for a month. On the intervening days, twice each week, add to the water six drops of dandelion juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a threepennypiece, and on two other days give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts niger, millet, black rape, linseed, and teazle. Give a little green food daily, varying this from time to time. Slightly moisten the bare skin twice a week with sulphur ointment. If you do not find the new quills coming through nicely after a month of this treatment, I am afraid you will have to endure its unsightly appearance until next moulting season.

EGG-BINDING AND EGG-EATING (Crest).—Overfed fat hens are not infrequently troubled with egg binding with soft eggs. See if this is the case with your hen, and if so separate her for a fortnight, give a quite plain staple diet, and supplement it with a liberal supply of green food daily, but strictly avoid dandelion, and add aperients to the water every second day for a week. If she is not in an overfed condition, give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar every second day, and a pinch of mixed seeds on the alternate days. Give a little green food daily—dandelion excepted—as before. In the drinking water add 20 drops of Chemical Food daily for a week, and in the following week six drops of tincture of gentian and three of tincture of steel every second day. When hen begins nesting again, in addition to keeping a supply of cuttlefish accessible, smash up a little old mortar and strew it on top of the sand on the cage floor regularly until she has laid her eggs. As regards egg eating, an occasional lapse may not be serious or repeated. For dealing with this vice, see reply to "Georgius" in last issue.

CLEANING CAGE DURING INCUBATION (A Novice, Bristol).—If your cages are fitted with sand trays you may clean them just as usual whilst the hen is sitting, unless the usual cleaning day should happen to coincide very closely with the time young are due to hatch, when it is advisable, especially in the case of very highly strung nervous hens, to defer the operation for a few days. But with this type of cage, if the work is done carefully, and without unnecessary noise and bluster, there is little risk of it seriously disturbing the hen. If the cages have no sand trays, so that you either have to remove dirt through the doorway or scrape it out through a turnrail opening, it would be best to well clean cages and put in a good layer of clean dry sand when putting the hen to sit, and not disturb them again until the young are a few days old. If the bulk of the droppings occur in one or two places in small heaps, they may be removed without any disturbance at all, and a little fresh sand strewn over the spot. You may offer a bath, if weather is mild, when hen has been sitting six or eight days, and then daily from the twelfth day onwards. In hot sultry weather offer a bath daily all through, and in piercing cold weather such as we have just gone through, withhold it altogether. In short, use discretion.

NOT A BLONDIN (Norwich Cock).—One would think that a bird apparently in good health which falls from its perch on to its back and lays there chirping until picked up, was either pulling one's leg, or showing Blondinites "how not to do it." You say it is not a fit, and it is not his claws, so, candidly, I do not know what to suggest without a more complete knowledge of its treatment and environment. How do you feed it; what kind of cage is it kept in; and how long has this curious habit lasted? If kept in a cage with wire top it may be due to vertigo, brought on by a habit similar to the twirling of a Goldfinch under similar conditions, but even then a bird in good health should be able to recover its equilibrium quite easily if it performed the unlikely feat of turning a somersault and landing itself flat on its back. At any rate, I have found tame birds invariably able to do so when placed on their backs. If your bird is in a wire-top cage, throw some cover over the top for a time; give it a liberal supply of green food daily, and add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much sulphate of soda as will cover a threepennypiece to its drinking water every second day for a week. If this does not remove its antics, write again and give full particulars indicated above.

PLUCKS ITS TAIL (W. H. Bunney).—You ought to have said whether the hen seems in good health or not, and how you feed and treat her generally. It may be merely a bad habit, the irritation of insect pests, or even the hen's method of working off the superabundant energy which is apt to affect healthy unmated birds at this season. As the tail has been absent a month, it is practically certain that the feathers are broken off and the stumps left in the sockets, unless the hen pulls out the young quills as they appear. Catch the bird and examine it, and also the cage, for insect pests, and if any are found take the necessary steps to exterminate them. Also see if stumps of feathers are left in tail. If they are, gently extract four—two from each side—and repeat this operation twice, with an interval of five or six days between each time. This will remove the stumps of a complete tail, and give the new feathers a chance to grow. Stick a bit of sugar or cuttlefish in the wires for bird to peck at, and give a large fat mealworm each day for a time if any are available. Give a morsel of bread and milk slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur every second day for a week, and on the alternate days add five drops of dilute sulphuric acid and six of tincture of gentian to the drinking water. Allow bird to bathe freely.

IN DOUBT (D. J. W. H.).—I see no reason to doubt the fertility of the clutch of eggs just because you have seen no copulation taking place. In such cases as these, if the hen is allowed to sit her full time, many pleasant surprises are experienced. If you do not care to let her sit the full time, by all means let her sit a week, and then test the eggs before coming to a decision about them. If the cock shows any signs of interfering with nest after hen has commenced sitting, remove him, and cage him alone, but I see no necessity for high feeding. His reduced singing after mating is not unnatural. See reply to "L. J. L." in this issue. You may add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea to his water for three days, and afterwards six drops of tincture of gentian and three of tincture of steel for three or four days, and give two dandelion leaves daily. Nothing else should be necessary. Glad the other bird you wrote about is now well.

ARE THEY RUINED? (H. Tite).—No, decidedly; the birds are not necessarily spoilt altogether by going into a soft moult last season. I think they only want a little more time, and they will certainly do with a little extra feeding. Do not separate the birds. In addition to the staple seed diet give a small teaspoonful of egg food every second day, and mix in it a third of a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame. On the alternate days give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, millet, black rape and teazle, with a sprinkling of mustard seed. Give three dandelion leaves daily. With this treatment, and the advent of mild, settled weather, I think you will find things go ahead more favourably.

MOULTING AND PANTING (Disheartened, Birmingham).—I'm afraid you have a very "bad bargain." Keep the bird in a comfortable temperature certainly, but do not overheat it. The great point is to keep it free from cold, cutting draughts, rapid extreme fluctuations, and heated impure air. Beyond this, see that it is in a bright, airy, and well-ventilated place. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. Feed as advised to "John Cooper" for a month. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb, and as much sulphate of soda as will cover a threepennypiece every second day for a week. After this give 20 drops of chemical food every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days 20 drops of the following mixture, which any chemist will mix for you. Two drachms each of glycerine and oxymel of squills, one drachm each of chlorodyne and ipecacuanha wine, and eight grains of iodide of potassium. Continue giving the last-named mixture every second day for a month, if necessary.

NOT SITTING (Gahagan, Fulham).—Your only way out of the difficulty when the hen refused to sit would have been to transfer the eggs to another hen just about beginning to sit, or distribute them amongst any other small clutches you happened to put to set during the next week or so. There was no necessity to separate the pair on account of hen not sitting, but it would do no harm, and might be helpful to remove both birds to the other room where they will be more quiet. You might next time try the effect of separating the cock, and removing him out of earshot on the evening when the third egg is laid. At the same time you will, of course, return the three eggs, and leave hen to hatch and rear them alone if she will. Whilst separated now you have, I expect, been treating the same as frequently advised here for backward birds or preparing birds for mating. In that case, if they are in good condition, mate them again and continue this treatment until hen goes to nest.

ROLLER GOING OFF SONG (John Cooper).—The fact of the feathers dropping shows that moulting is the cause of the bird beginning to go off song. You do not say whether the bird moulted at the proper season last autumn. If it did not, you should keep it fairly warm, and encourage this moult to get through completely, when the bird will come in most usefully as a tutor next autumn, as it will doubtless remain in full song all through the most critical period of tuition, when there is always more or less risk of tutors going off song when most inconvenient. If a proper moult occurred last autumn, then keep the bird in a comfortable place free from draughts, and in addition to the staple seed diet give half a teaspoonful of crushed stale sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed every second day. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, millet, and teazle. Give two leaves of dandelion daily. Allow bird to bathe freely in mild weather. In the drinking water give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel every second day. Continue this treatment until feathers cease dropping. Bird will not resume full song until moult is stopped.

CAUSE OF UNFERTILITY (J.E.W.).—I presume you tested the eggs by looking through them against a strong light after the hens had sat on them for a week or thereabouts, otherwise I do not see how you conclude the last clutches are unfertile, as they are not due to hatch at time of writing this. Eggs not infrequently dry up in the shell, and though they remain, or the solid portion that is left behind remains quite "clear," I do not think such eggs are necessarily unfertile. In your case I certainly think the cock is not quite up to the scratch. The hens, assuming there is no trouble from their eggs drying up, appear to have too much virility to think of discarding them without further trial, even if you had to get a fresh cock. Let the hens sit their full time, then if they seem to be coming forward again, limit the diet to a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape, and add a small crystal of sulphate of soda to the water for a day or two in order to keep them back until cock has had a full fortnight of the following treatment: Give him the same staple as above, and for the rest feed him the same as advised to "H. Tite," in this issue, but give only two dandelion leaves daily. In the drinking water give a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea for three days, and afterwards six drops of tincture of gentian and three of tincture of steel two days in every three for a week. When the hens start nesting again get a little old mortar, crush finely, and strew it on the sand, in addition to giving cuttlefish. If the next clutches prove unfertile, I would advise you to get a vigorous 1912 cock, in song, and let them try once more this season.

SILENT "COCKS" (?) (Distracted).—It is certainly curious that your two-year-old cock should be in song, and not one of the four bred last year yet singing. I read your letter to mean that they have not commenced singing at all, in which case notwithstanding your referring to them with evident conviction as cocks, I am strongly inclined to suspect they are of the other sex. If they really sang before being mated their silence now is not very important, as you will gather if you refer to reply to "L.J.L." in this issue. Your feeding is not quite so good as it might be, but it is not sufficient to account for the birds never singing. If a cock is in good health and active, it is not absolutely essential for it to be singing in order to fertilise eggs, so I would advise you to let the two hens which have clutches of eggs to these supposed cocks sit out their full time, and if their mates are really cocks the result may be quite satisfactory. Feed as follows: Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. Every second day give to each pair a small teaspoonful of egg food, and mix with it about half the quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure and sesame each time. On the alternate days give a teaspoonful of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, black rape and teazle, with just a sprinkling of mustard seed. Give three dandelion leaves daily. Stop giving linseed, and also apple, and limit diet to above items. Add ten drops of syrup of buckthorn to the water for two days—excepting those hens that have gone to nest—and follow up this by giving three drops of tincture of steel and six of tincture of gentian for three or four days.

A CATASTROPHE (J.W.F.).—There are two very probable causes of the loss of the young brood, viz., either the hen ceased feeding, which may have been partly due to the sudden alteration in the egg food, or the biscuit being added to the egg suddenly in large quantity, upset the young by congesting the alimentary tract and putting them off their feed. You make no mention of green food, and if this was not given, or not increased when so large a proportion of biscuit was added to the egg all at once, it would greatly aggravate its effect, and tend to bring about a calamity. It is never wise to make such drastic changes in the food suddenly when a very young brood is in the nest. With the next brood proceed as follows, and you should succeed: For the first day or two give yolk of egg as before. On the third day add just a pinch of biscuit powder, or crumb of stale household bread, not more than a quarter of the bulk, and give a little fresh crisp green food. Next day increase the proportion of biscuit to a third part of the bulk, and give a little more green food. Give fresh egg food and fresh green food at least twice daily. When the young are about eight days old you may again increase the proportion of biscuit, or bread, as the case may be, by easy stages, until you have it at two parts biscuit to one part egg. At this time you may also begin to give a teaspoonful of soaked rape daily, and a little later a little freshly cracked hemp each day and a fairly liberal supply of green food, but be careful not to allow any stale portions of any of the foods to remain in the cage. To obviate this as far as possible, do not give unreasonably large quantities of food. Give little and often, rather than a large quantity at longer intervals. Aim at giving just as much each time as the birds are likely to clear up by next meal-time.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES, AND HYBRIDS.

SKYLARK MOULTING (Kral).—Turn to the reply given "H. J. W." and follow the advice given in the latter portion of it (except, of course, in regard to the food). Your bird would be benefited by having its daily supply of soft food moistened with half a teaspoonful of extract of malt (obtainable from any chemist); just mix this amongst the food.

DIET OF ADULT GOLDFINCH MULES (Lecturer).—Stock seed mixture now: teazle four parts, canary three parts, summer rape one part, linseed half-part, by measure. Have also two other mixtures: (1) sunflower two parts, hemp one part: (2) niger, maw, and a high-class wild-seed mixture, equal parts of each. Give rather more than a teaspoonful of No. 1 to each bird twice a week, and a teaspoonful of No. 2 once a week. The Mules should thrive splendidly on this diet. Give a sprig or two of greenfood (seeding chickweed, shepherd's purse, and groundsel are the best, and are readily obtainable), or a bit of ripe fruit (apple, banana, orange, split grape, etc.), or thistle heads, hardheads, dandelion heads, etc., according to season.

ROUND THE EYE (F. B. S. M.).—The treatment you mention probably caused the Goldie to rub the region of the eye on the perch a good deal, and so brought about the "baldness" by rubbing away the feathers. If the eye and the flesh in the immediate region of the eye look healthy (I presume you would have said so had the case been otherwise), I advise you to leave things as they are, for the plumage will be renewed at the next moult. It is always risky to be meddlesome where the eye is concerned, for after treatment the bird invariably proceeds to rub it on a perch (of course, it is possible to take steps to render this less likely to cause harm), which may result in worse damage.

SOME STIFF QUESTIONS (J. E. W.).—(1) The unfertility would be due to the fact that no male sperm reached and fused with the female ovum. But this does not necessarily mean that the cock bird is sterile. The act of mating may not be properly consummated for some reason or other (excessive feather round the vents, or too great a discrepancy in the size of the two birds might be causes, or a difference in the manner of performing the act). It is not by any means uncommon for a certain pair of Canaries to produce nothing but unfertile eggs, yet when the hen is given a fresh husband, and her late spouse another wife, fertile eggs come from both couples. I have had this puzzling experience in my own bird room. By the way, judging by the figures you give, I think you allow your cock-birds to waste their strength; if mating occurs five or six times just prior to the laying of the first egg and up to the laying of the second, this is quite sufficient to ensure the fertility of a clutch of eggs. (2) You got on to different ground when substituting the hen Bullie for the hen Canary. For instance, I have known hen Bullies to "call" repeatedly to the cock Goldie, Linnet, or Canary, as the case may be, over a considerable period of time, and he has nobly done his duty, yet she has never so much as laid an egg! There can be no doubt that there is a certain incompatibility (or insultability, I can't think of a better term to express my meaning) to overcome in the case of hybrid couples. (3) Personally, I have always found healthy, well domesticated (steady and used to cage life) English hen Bullfinches very ready to lay eggs in captivity—it is several years now since I had one that declined to do so, and my records show that they have been very few in the whole of my experience. The foreign (Siberian or Russian) hen Bullfinch is quite a different proposition, however. Don't apologise for your questions: it is a treat to receive a few off the stereotyped track.

GOLDFINCH MULE MOULTING (W. D. G.).—Your bird will go right through with the moult now; indeed, you say that the feathers are "tumbling off him." The more quickly he gets it over the better it will be for him. If you did not start the colour-food until after he had been shedding feathers for some time, then he will be bound to come out patchy in colour. He will moult again next autumn. I can only guess at the likely cause of this cross moult. Note the reply given "H. J. W." this week; even a sudden change in the atmospheric conditions will sometimes suffice to start birds moulting out of season.

A LINNET'S TROUBLE (G.H.M.).—In my opinion you are not feeding the bird at all well, and this is most likely the cause of the digestive upset. Read the "Nutshell" booklet on the Linnet (post free 2½d.). He should have plenty of teazle-seed in the stock mixture. The green-food should not be watercress now, but seeding chickweed and shepherd's purse, groundsel tops, and ripe dandelion heads, with the young, tender leaves also. Get from a chemist half an ounce each of tincture of gentian and tincture of rhubarb, mixed, and stir half a teaspoonful into two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. Give this fresh daily for 4 or 5 days, then on alternate days (plain water in between) over a period of 8 to 10 days, being guided by the bird's appetite and the state of its excreta. The medicine and the improved diet should soon alter the bird's condition.

LINNET IN MOULT (H. J. W.).—How did it happen? Have you moved the bird from a heated living-room into a cold room? Sometimes this is inadvertently done; i.e., a fancier buys a bird which has been kept in a heated room, but doesn't enquire as to this (maybe doesn't think of it) and puts the bird at once into, say, his own unheated outdoor bird-room. If the weather is cold, or chilly and damp, the result is "soft moult," or, worse still, pneumonia. Should your Linnet be casting feathers freely you can do little beyond waiting until the new plumage is completed, in the meantime feeding the bird generously, to keep up its strength, and keeping it in a sunny room, out of draughts. For use as a tonic and help, get one ounce of crystals of citrate of iron from a chemist, and dissolve as much as will cover a threepenny-piece in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. Give this fresh daily for a week; then on alternate days (plain water in between) for about a fortnight. Let the bird have some seeding dandelion heads, and chickweed and shepherd's purse—all are obtainable freely now.

LINNET, ALSO GOLDFINCH AND CANARY COUPLES (First Shot).—Within the last week or two I have dealt with the feeding after mating of both Linnet-Canary and Goldfinch-Canary couples. Please look up these replies; it is impossible to repeat the same information practically weekly. The more liberal diet given the Finch does no harm whatever to the hen Canary after they are paired. As regards rearing the young birds, note the article now appearing in our paper. The broad outlines of my own methods are: I give all my hens, from the first day of hatching, canary seed in one vessel and summer rape in another vessel, with about a teaspoonful (according to number of young) of cracked hemp. I increase the latter as the youngsters grow, and add cracked sunflower and Plasmon oats or coarse oatmeal. Some hens like one thing, some another, and they should be "humoured" in this respect, if it is necessary. I don't think it essential to give plain yolk of egg; in fact, I find hens eat it better if a little crushed sweet biscuit is added. With regard to the giving of green food, this depends upon the kind available; if I am using stalks of ripe seeding shepherd's purse I give a little practically from the first, quickly increasing the quantity. I am very fond of this, and very successful with it, while the hens consume it greedily. Chickweed comes next in my estimation. If a hen "goes off" egg-food, I mix equal parts sweet biscuit and Plasmon oats and thoroughly moisten it with milk that has been boiled—this will rear as fine, lusty birds as ever were reared by egg. Note also the reply given "A. E. Clark" this week.

A HYBRID PAIR (A. E. Clark).—The advisability of removing the Goldfinch lies in the fact that the majority persist in either interfering with (pulling about) the nest, or smashing the eggs; even if they are not guilty of these crimes they seldom tolerate the presence of the young Mules, but are apt to bully and attack them. Thus it will be obvious to you that the best and safest plan is to leave the hen to incubate the eggs and rear the young all on her lonesome, as the poet says. With regard to feeding the young, note the reply given "First Shot" this week. A great point is not to encourage the hen Canary to get on with her next nest until the Mules are fairly on the way to supplying their own wants. Don't give her nesting material, on any account, until the youngsters are beginning to pick over the food. The latter should be placed on a "feeding board," one of the most useful appliances out (an illustration appears in this week's Cage Birds). By using this they get on food very quickly; they see the hen feeding from it, and soon begin to follow her example. When observed to do the latter, they can be shut off with a wired slide, through which the hen will continue to give them frequent "meals" (while building her next nest) until they cease to "cry" to her for food. Put a mixture of food on the board—egg-bread, well sprinkled with Plasmon oats (obtained from the grocer) and also some crushed canary, hemp and sunflower seeds, and maw seed, together with sprays of ripe seeding shepherd's purse. Shepherd's purse is very valuable; young birds delight in it.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

AILING AMAZON (H. S.).—Please send full details as to how you have fed and treated this bird generally. Only such information can guide me as to cause and trouble. In the meantime, put a little honey and borax in the bird's mouth from the end of a small stick, twice a day, and if it appears to need a stimulant give a few sips of very weak brandy and water at intervals during the day. If it cannot eat seed, prepare a little sop as follows: Break up a plain biscuit, soak into it half a teaspoonful of Byno-phosphates, sprinkle with moist sugar, and pour over it sufficient boiling water to make the biscuit quite soft. As soon as it is eating freely of the seed mixture again gradually discontinue the sop. Give the above remedies at once, and send me the information asked for, and I will try and help you further. You must give details as to what the bird has had to eat during the past twelve months; also give particulars as to where you keep it. You ought not to have let the trouble run on for six months without getting some advice.

CAPE CANARIES (K., Knightsbridge).—From your description, your birds are Green Singing Finches, and not Cape Canaries; both belong to the genus Serinus, and the same treatment applies to each. They are both hardy species, and can be kept out of doors all the year round in a properly constructed garden aviary. Indoors, the temperature of any living or sitting room will suffice, but, like all birds, they must not be subjected to draught. It will be to their benefit to be put out of doors on genial, sunny days. Add a little rape to your seed mixture, and give an occasional millet spray. Greenfood should be given regularly, groundsel, lettuce, chickweed, shepherd's purse, and flowering grass are all readily eaten. A slice of sweet apple is a good substitute for greenfood during the winter months if the birds will take it.

FOR OUTDOOR AVIARY (Bird Lover).—Some of them will breed with you, and you should begin with pairs each of Zebra Finches (7s. 6d.), Silverbills (3s. 6d.), Gold-breasted Waxbills (3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.), Green Singing Finches (5s.), Avadavats (2s. 6d.), Bengalese (3s. 6d.), Spice Finches (2s. 6d.): prices given are approximate, and per pair. You could also put in odd cocks of Bullfinch, Goldfinch, Linnet, Redpoll, Twite and Siskin, but the two first are often great bullies in a mixed series, and you would have to be prepared to keep them caged if they proved to be such. You should supply the food in seed boxes or tins. The above would all do well on a seed mixture of canary, white millet, and Indian millet, also millet sprays, and some wild seed mixture for the British species. Of course, you must supply the other essentials regularly, viz.: Greenfood, grit, cuttlebone, and water. "Foreign Bird for Beginners" would help you greatly, 1s. 1½d. post free from our manager.

AILING GREEN PARROT (M. E. B. F.).—So long as the voidings are not watery loose, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, when the voidings become too loose, only give the magnesia once a week. On the days you are not giving the magnesia, put half a teaspoonful of byno-phosphates in the drinking water. It would also be well to get a box of honey and borax from your chemist, and to put a little on its tongue, or just inside its beak (use a small piece of stick for the purpose) once or twice daily; this will help to keep the throat clear. Diet: Seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, stale crusts, shelled nuts, and a piece of biscuit will give you an ample range of diet. Do not give any table scraps or sops; grit and cuttlebone must be regularly supplied. Treat as above, and report progress two or three weeks hence.

BIRDS FOR OUTDOOR AVIARY (A. R. L.).—You must not put in more than two dozen birds, and some of these must be small; also, I do not consider the Chaffinch, Greenfinch, Bullfinch, and Pekin safe company for the small foreigners in such space. The following would be a nice series:—Foreign: Zebra Finch, Silverbill, Bengalese, Orange-cheek and Gold-breasted Waxbills, Cordon Bleus, and Bib Finches (one pair of each). British: Siskin, Twite, Linnet, and Redpoll. You could put in odd cocks of Madagascar and Napoleon Weavers. The English Goldfinch is frequently an awful bully in restricted quarters. You could either put in a pair of Canaries or only hens, and have cocks only of the British species. I should turf the portion of flight which comes under the wire netting portion of roof.

AILING AMAZON (H.S.).—It is digestive troubles with your bird, and you must cease giving a "bit of everything," or it will mean prolonged suffering and ultimate death. Give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, so long as the voidings are not watery loose. If the latter occurs, then only give the magnesia once a week; on the intermediate days put half a teaspoonful of byno-phosphates in the drinking water; supply clear water once a week only. There is an ample range of diet without giving that which is unwholesome—such as seed mixture, any kind of ripe fruit it will eat, nuts, dry plain biscuit, grit and cuttlebone should all form part of the daily menu. The following can also be given to vary the menu: Potato (dry), stale crusts, crust of toast, plainish cake (sultana, madeira, or sponge), but do not give any tea, coffee, or milk sops, other table scraps or animal food of any kind whatever. Continue the magnesia and phosphates for at least two months so as to properly correct matters; if you bring your treatment into line with the above, the bird should gradually recover tone, but any recurrence of the "bit of anything" diet will only bring about a similar or worse state of things.

ABOUT DOVES (A. McG.).—This query was partially replied to in our last issue. Doves that are closely allied are often very quarrelsome with each other, but I am of the opinion that you could keep three pairs in your outhouse. You already have the Barbary Turtle-Dove, and you could have Senegal Turtle-Doves, and either Australian Crested Pigeons or Picui Doves; very probably the above quartet would all agree together; they all breed freely. As regards sexing, the plumage in most species is similar, and sexing is difficult; the best way is, as pairs come into your hands, to study the shapes of the heads of male and female. You may easily pick out the former by his display to his mate.

GOULDIANS (Gould).—Gouldian Finches breed at almost all periods of the year in this country, and I certainly advise your persevering with this pair of birds, as I cannot but think that ultimate success will come your way. Keep the male bird under observation, and note if he is the culprit in throwing out the eggs; if so, you might change the cocks of your pairs (I think you have more than one pair); if not, let them have another try; brighter and warmer weather and unlimited green food may bring success. You might try another type of nest box, one closed all round and pretty deep, with an elliptical hole cut out of one side near the top for entrance. The probability is, the hen will lay another clutch straight away. Give them as much flowering grass as they will eat.

BIRDS FOR AVIARY (Oiseaux).—(1) The Budgerigars and Grey Java Sparrows should agree well together. I have known them so kept by many fanciers without mishap. The Pekin also would be all right, though he is somewhat of a nest robber and, moreover, must have soft food, ripe fruit, and live insects. (2) The Budgerigars would certainly breed in the aviary sooner or later, and very probably the Java Sparrows also. (3) Canary and white millet in equal parts, as one mixture for one hopper; and another of sunflower seed, hemp, paddy rice, and oats in equal parts. Also give one or two millet sprays per week. The essentials, viz., green food, grit, cuttlebone, and water, must also be regularly supplied. As regards green food, flowering grass and lettuce are favoured by all the above.

DOUBLE-FRONTED AMAZON (F. H.).—Give a dose (one teaspoonful in drinking water) of Dinneford's Magnesia once a week for a couple of months. Also get the following mixture:—Ipecacuanha wine, Oxymel of Squills, and Glycerine in equal parts; half-teaspoonful of the mixture in the drinking water till the breathing is easier, on such days as you are not giving the magnesia. When the breathing is relieved, stop the mixture and put half a teaspoonful of Byno-phosphates in the drinking water every other day, which will tone the bird up. Your present diet is satisfactory, and the bird has the opportunity of taking exercise ad lib. I should not stint the food, but at same time let the bird eat up its seed pretty close before replenishing the tin. Soak and cleanse the legs and feet in hot watr (not hot enough for discomfort), then dry with a soft cloth and paint with neat whisky. Providing the voidings do not become watery-loose, the magnesia might be given every fourth day with advantage. After treating as above for a fortnight, please report progress.

YOUNG BLUE-FRONT (J. Reid).—Bathe the nostrils regularly with dilute glyco-thymoline, say daily for a fortnight. Give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water, and repeat the dose once a week for a month. Get the following mixture from your chemist: Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine in equal parts, put half a teaspoonful of this mixture in the drinking water (usual quantity), till the breathing is easier, on such days as you are not giving the magnesia; as soon as the breathing trouble is relieved, then give half-teaspoonful of Bynophosphates in the drinking water every other day for a month to tone it up. Keep two seed tins in its cage, one containing canary and wheat and the other sunflower, hemp, oats, and paddy rice. It will ultimately take some of the latter. It can have a little of any vegetables (unseasoned) it will take, also plain biscuits and some nuts. Of course, you must keep it fairly warm for a bit and guard against draught.

LEGAL QUERIES.

Answered by A. Barrister.

A Slander (Kilgerran).—There is no jurisdiction in the county courts to hear slander actions. The action must be started in the High Court and tried at the Assizes, and it cannot succeed unless you prove the publication of the words complained of. The onus of proving publication is upon you. The slander, if uttered, is a serious one. When you are in a position to call people who will swear that the words were spoken to them, you had better instruct your solicitor again.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

E. H. (Wolverhampton).—Norwich hen died of broncho-pneumonia, arising in the first place from a cold, with extension of the inflammation to the bronchial tubes and lung tissue.

Puzzled (West Hartlepool).—Acute enteritis, or inflammation of the bowels, as the result of ptomaine poisoning.

Thomas Jones (Wimbledon).—Bird received was a hen, hence absence of song. It was in a very emaciated and impoverished condition, and appeared to have had rather a bad time. There was a subacute inflammation of the bowels, the exciting cause of death.

THE TRIALS OF A NOVICE

claws like reaper's hooks, which looked in every direction except downwards. Besides, she could not sit properly on the spar, for the want of back toes. Moreover, she seems to need new feathers every month or so. I found out afterwards he had bought it for 1s. 6d., and then charged me half-a-crown for it. Alas! human nature is weak where the almighty dollar is concerned. That hen has made somebody happy, however, for I have presented it to a little nephew of mine, who thinks as much of it as any fancier does of his first prize birds. My next purchase was the Goldie mentioned at the beginning of this letter. Let me say here that despite the way this bird has disappointed me in the matter of Mule breeding, I am deeply in love with him. His knowing and familiar ways fairly catch me. Try as I may, however, I cannot induce him to enter the wedded state.

Existing only to Eat!

All he seems to live for is his appetite, despite the leap year advances of his fair companion, viz., the buff hen. The first nest of eggs his intended mate laid, he devoured all but one. On the next clutch of eggs I cut a hole in the bottom of the nest, and placed a box underneath it. This box was lined with a stocking foot, and filled with cotton wool. The hen began straightway to fill up the hole with feathers, etc., but I took care she did not manage it. I got four eggs, and put these into a new nest, removed the Goldie, and waited with patience. I allowed her to sit the time, but no young birds appeared. I tried one of the eggs to see if there was any sign of life. No matter how I put it down, it persisted in standing on one end. I remembered the tricks of a toy I had seen; a fat Chinaman who, no matter how he was tossed about, always alighted on his feet. I remembered his mechanism, one end "full of emptiness," the other with lead. That egg was dry, with the yolk at one end. I broke the others, but they were all clear. My next trial was with a green hen, which I purchased from a chap who was giving up the Fancy, and gave her to wife to the Border cock. This hen laid five eggs, but would not sit on them. Better luck next time thought I; but she died in the attempt.

The Hardest of Hard Luck.

A few days after I invested 1s. in another Linnet. I liked his song, but he has not the taking ways of the Goldie. Shortly after I procured a hen for him. This hen caused me some anxiety, too. She was egg-bound the first egg she laid, but after my experience with the green hen I saved her. That egg constituted her first clutch. The next time the eggs were laid on the floor of the cage, and were all broken but one. She sat the third time though, after laying four eggs, two of which were fertile. Now, thought I, for Linnet Mules. But again disappointment. I allowed her to sit a day over the time, and then broke the eggs. I found one had "gone back," and the other contained a live Mule. I could have eaten my bonnet. To crown all, I am afraid I have lost a nest of Canaries. There were five or six fertile eggs, due to hatch to-day, but this morning I saw the hen was not covering the eggs properly, and I am afraid she may have been doing this too often. If any of your readers have had harder luck than this I shall be pleased to hear from them. We learn more from our failures than from our successes, but I think I would prefer the successes, and leave the learning to someone else! If there is any other novice who has caught the fever badly let me warn him not to try muling the first year, but to buy a pair of big Canaries, half Norwich and half Yorkshire. Should he succeed with these he will have a stock of hens for muling with the following year, while, if he wishes, he can easily dispose of the cocks at a profit.

Are Clear Mules got this way?

To my mind clear muling is the only thing worth aiming at; therefore buff birds should be bought, as it is from these that clear mules come. I have inquired into two cases where clear Mules have been got, and in both instances buff hens have been used, with cock British birds known to be advanced in years. My next point is, deposit your money with Cage Birds, and get your birds on approval. This is not a pat on the back for the Editor, but a genuine business hint. Never trust a Goldfinch with eggs, but adopt the plan stated above. Voracious eaters should be fed on plain canary, giving the rich seeds in small quantities twice daily. I am convinced that 90 per cent. of the Goldies which die, are killed by overfeeding. Always give your eggs at least two days over the stated hatching time, if the hen will sit.

Two Eggs in One Day.

Sir,—May I ask if any reader has had a similar experience to this: On the 13th April a Lizard-Norwich cross-bred hen (bred May, 1912) laid the first of a clutch of eggs, then missed laying the next day. On the 15th, however, she laid two eggs, both in the same night, one of which was perfect, but the other had no shell on one part of it, about one-sixteenth of an inch across, which was covered with skin.

New Society for Cumberland and Westmorland.

Sir,—A society has been formed at Maryport called the Cumberland and Westmorland, Yorkshire C.C. The aim of this society is to popularise the Yorkshire Canary, both in the breeding rooms and shows, by giving extra point specials at approved shows held in the two counties. We have already a good membership, and a committee of enthusiastic fanciers. Our next meeting is on May 14th, 8 o'clock, at R. Pearson's, Senhouse Street, when we hope to enroll still more members. The Captive Life of a Skylark.

Sir,—I have a Skylark that has been in captivity for eleven years, and been out of doors all the year round, night and day, wind, rain, or snow, ever since he was hand-reared. He is one of the finest songsters that anyone has ever heard; he is the one to get you up early in the morning, just as it breaks daylight. The diet he has had is hemp seed, not crushed, and the waste seed, etc., from Canaries, and a new turf now and again. He can be heard singing 200 yards off. He is kept in an open Blackbird's cage with the perches out. He is as tame as a Canary, and will pick anything out of your fingers. I should be very pleased if you think it worth while to put this in your valuable paper

Though we cannot commend our correspondent on his method of feeding the bird, his letter is interesting, as showing how some birds will thrive on a diet that seems both unsuitable and inadequate.—Editor.

Black Mealworms.

They Return After Many Days.

Sir,—I was interested in seeing Mr. Arthur's letter on this subject in your last issue. I do not think his memory serves him quite correctly when saying I denied the existence of black mealworms, as a species. Like himself, I am writing from memory, and as the correspondence referred to took place five or six years ago, perhaps more, it is easy for either of us to be mistaken. I certainly did suggest that the black mealworms might be unhealthy specimens, which frequently occur in some stocks, and which are of a very dark colour, bordering upon black, but although I had not at that time, nor since, seen a normally healthy mealworm which I could honestly term a black one, I do not think I went so far as to deny the existence of such. I have seen mealworms said to be black ones, captured in a country bakery, and "wild grown," if such a term can be properly applied. They were certainly dusky, but it required a far more lively imagination than mine to believe they were black. Healthy specimens, quite as dark as they could, in my opinion, be picked out of any fair sized stock. I have not seen Mr. Arthur's specimens, so cannot express an opinion about them. The length of time they have been turning up might suggest the possibility of the existence of an uncommon variety due to environment, or, may be, a nearly allied species of beetle. If not troubling Mr. Arthur too much, I would be most obliged for a dozen or so of the most typical of his full grown, or nearly so, black specimens in order to investigate the latter point. As regards the growth of mealworms, I was amused to read the statement referred to by Mr. Arthur to the effect that the cycle from mealworm to mealworm was accomplished in three months. This assertion was so misleading that it was a pity the "blue pencil" did not exercise its prerogative and stop its career. Even Mr. Arthur's supposi- that the complete cycle requires twelve is, I am convinced, too short. Any logist knows that many species of require several years to complete their metamorphoses. A cycle of three years is a fairly common one, and in my opinion the mealworm beetle belongs to this class. I gave up the study of this subject prematurely many years ago, and have not resumed it, as I intended, to complete my investigations into the life history of this beetle. But so far as I went my results led me decisively to the above opinion. In one experiment I isolated six mealworms, ranging in size from a quarter of an inch long downwards. Twelve months later the largest worm was one inch long, and the smallest five-eights of an inch long—still quite immature. The pupal stage —i.e., between worm and beetle only—in every case isolated lasted from four to five weeks according to the prevalent weather. The results of these actual experiments with isolated specimens shows how ridiculous is the assertion of a three months cycle from mealworm to mealworm.

CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

[We do not remember the "three months" theory which is referred to by Mr. Arthur and Mr. St. John. Certainly, we have repeatedly published the fact that the cycle from mealworm to mealworm is not less than one year. We are forwarding to Mr. St. John the examples of black mealworms kindly sent by Mr. Arthur.—Editor.]

The "Filup" Feeder.

Free Trial for 14 Days.

AFTER USING THE FILUP FEEDER FOR THREE WEEKS

The most sanitary and up-to-date method ever invented for hand-feeding all young birds.

It has been supplied to all the most prominent bird-breeders in Great Britain; also to South Africa, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, America, India, and places too numerous to mention.

Unsolicited testimonials have been received from Fanciers who have saved and reared their best birds with this Feeder, and many noted exhibition birds owe their existence to it.

We are again making the above offer of 14 days' Free Trial, to give all bird breeders an opportunity of testing in their own bird-room the merits of the "Filup" Feeder. It's no use waiting until your hens stop feeding before you send for one. Breeders! You should have one ready to hand, and directly you see a hen show signs of flagging in her feeding, you should at once help her with the "Filup," and in a day or two she will once more commence her duties with extra energy. Have you not noticed how weak and backward your young birds very often look first thing in the morning? Well, the reason is simple enough—their crops are not full enough overnight to keep their strength up until the morning. Every breeder should go round the whole of his young birds before dusk, and, if their crops are not full, he should at once use the "Filup" on them, which only takes one minute to completely satisfy a whole nest of youngsters. You will then note a remarkable difference in their condition in the morning. They will be strong enough to let the hen know they want more food. But should you neglect to feed them overnight, you will find the majority are too weak to open their mouths even if the hen tries to feed them. They then gradually get weaker, until at last they rest in the dustbin.

Young birds are let die in thousands in this way simply because you neglect them while they are strong, and can be kept strong by a little hand feeding at the proper time.

Sir,—I thought you would be pleased to hear that there is one C.B.A. very much alive, and up-to-date in its methods of providing for the coming season. It proves what can be done by a body of workers, united, and sportsmen in a true sense. We have just had a lecture on "Animal Heroes," by the renowned E. Thomson Seton, Esq., the famous American hunter and naturalist. The result far exceeded our anticipation, leaving a big nest egg in the bank, so that all exhibitors sending birds to the B. and D. C.B.A. show may know that the prize money is guaranteed already; we have engaged the large Rifle Drill Hall (near station). It has plenty of room, and is well lighted. We are having a paper by Mr. J. H. Payne, of Gloucester, and have arranged an outing to the Museum (over 400 species of British birds) at Christchurch, with a lecture on them by the collector, Mr. Hart. Friends are invited to all our gatherings.

Death to Red Mite.

Sir,—The following will be found an effective method of destroying red-mite. Take the infected cage out of doors and remove the front, but leave the perches, etc., alone. Take a good teaspoonful of Keating's powder, and place it in a small vessel, a tin can for instance. Put two or three red-hot cinders on this powder and turn the cage front downwards over it, leave it there for about twelve hours. Afterwards wash the cage thoroughly with soap and warm water, when thoroughly dry it is ready for use, and all traces of red mite gone.

A Voice from Canada.

An English Fancier Writes from British Columbia.

Sir,—I have just received your splendid issue of CAGE BIRDS of February 15th, containing the report of the great Crystal Palace Bird Show, and beg to congratulate you on the magnificent report you put out for the pleasure and benefit of the Fancy. I can assure you the reports of all the leading shows form very interesting reading to me every week when I get my CAGE BIRDS. I was sorry to hear of the cold wet weather you had in the old country in the early part of last breeding season, as I noticed a great many fanciers complained of it being a very poor breeding season. I was pleased to note the high quality right through the various sections, both in the open and novices classes. I am inclined to think that it is the high (excessive) prices asked for really good stock birds of some varieties that keep them from becoming popular on the show bench. As a rule the bulk of the fanciers are among the ranks of the working class, and seeing that their pockets are not deep, they can't go in for costly varieties such as Belgians, Crests, Lancashires, and Scots Fancies. I expected to have seen some more new Hybrids out this year, in view of the "new road" opened last year by the appearance of the Greenie Chaffinch. I noticed in CAGE BIRDS that during the breeding season last year some breeder in Scotland claimed to have bred and reared two Siskin-Bullfinch Hybrids. What has become of these new Hybrids? They were not among those at the great show. I also noticed in CAGE BIRDS of Feb. 8th this year the report of a well-known exhibitor and judge, Mr. A. Hay, Berwick, that he had unfortunately lost his muling cock Chaffinch, which he claims bred mules with a Canary hen last year. The British birds must have been a wonderful sight seeing that all the champions were on view. I trust that the coming breeding season will be a good one for the Fancy, and wish your excellent paper every success.

Sir,—As a constant reader of your valuable paper, and being in the trade as a builder, I should like to say a word or two on how to fix roofing felt. I find that the more nails you put into felt, the sooner it is gone. Now, I might be charged by some persons in giving away a trade secret, but I will give you the best way to fix felt, exactly as it is done on the most modern principle, when, if done properly, you will have to take hammer and chisel to get it off. First get some pitch and boil up in creosote oil, which can be bought for sixpence per gallon, and while it is hot, start at the highest point of your building, with the length of felt rolled up. Cover the width of the boards, where the felt goes, with the hot mixture of pitch and oil, and roll the felt down on to it, until you have got the whole length out, and, at the same time as you are unrolling, press it down on to the mixture, which when set will fasten the felt to the boards all over. A very cheap way to cover a roof is to get some very old sacks, taking care that they are very dry. Open them and spread them out on the roof to be covered and tack them down at top and bottom with small tacks, and give them three coats of the above mixture on three consecutive days. You will then find that a roof will last for twenty years.

Some Observations on Birds.

Sir,—I thought perhaps the following notes I have taken might be of interest:—On March 23rd I heard what I took to be the Corn Bunting, and I think the Yellow Bunting also; April 2, heard Chiff-Chaff; April 7, heard Willow Warbler; April 18, heard Cuckoo in evening, and also every day since, at least once during day; April 19, saw two or three Swallow birds (not sure which), possibly Swallows or House Martins; they speedily disappeared, and I have not seen any since. A stuffer told me that he had killed a nice male Wheatear some little time back. Like the Parrot, I thought the more! I heard of Sand Martins being seen some good time back, and the Cuckoo, and I saw the Wryneck before I heard the Cuckoo. I may say with regard to the House Sparrow I have four hand-reared last year's birds, which I reared myself Personally, I like them very much. They are quaint, perky, hearty birds, and are in fine condition. They are shyer than some other of my hand-reared birds, but quite at home. They are a male and three females, all from one nest, and all that were in it. They do not show much sign of breeding, but I believe a Blackbird which I have does. All my birds are in cages. I found the Sparrows difficult to hand-rear, they seemed so nervous. I tried to imitate their surroundings by keeping them in a small barrel upright, and copying a domed nest, as they were taken from ivy on a house. I hand-reared a Hedge Sparrow, which I regret to say died through being too well fed. It was a most taking bird, very fearless. I have a hand-reared Linnet, and cock Chaffinch also, both extremely tame. I am afraid there is a lot of bird nesting, and there has been catapult work and promiscuous shooting about here. Is there a Recognised Yorkshire Show Cage in Ireland?

Sir,—I am a breeder of Yorkshire Canaries, and as yet a non-exhibitor, but as I intend exhibiting this coming season I would like to know if there is a recognised Yorkshire show cage in Ireland. At the few shows I have visited they were all sorts and sizes, some made with punch-bar frames, and others lapped wire, while not a few had detachable tops. There is also a great difference in the drinkers on these cages, some of them being white inside, some blue, others black, and even green. Perhaps some of your readers could give me a description of the genuine standard Yorkshire Union show cage and drinker. If any of the Irish societies have it in their rules that exhibitors must use Yorkshire Union show cages, I would be glad to become a member. In my opinion novices should fight shy of societies that allow other than the Union show cages, as they have absolutely no chance against the so-called novices who mark their cages, and this also would apply to many of the champion exhibitors. In the interests of fair competition all birds should be exhibited in similar cages.

Egg-bound Hens and Their Cure.

Sir,—The accompanying sketch is of an article which I have found of great use in dealing with hens that are egg-bound. By the usual method of applying oil to the vent, I found that as much oil went on the feathers as into the vent, thereby creating a loss of oil, and discomfort to the bird. The article in the sketch is made of fairly strong glass, and is based on the principle of a chemist's pipette. The oil to be used is sucked up into the reservoir C. The oil will remain in the reservoir so long as the tip of the finger is pressed tight over the end A. The end B is then placed in the vent of the bird, and the finger tip withdrawn from the end A. The emptying of the reservoir can be accelerated by blowing very gently down the end A. This tube will cost about twopence. If any of your readers have a blow lamp and a piece of glass tubing, they should try and blow the reservoir themselves; it is very easy, but they must be careful to cool it very gradually. The ends of the tube must be rounded off in the flame, or else they will cut the bird. I hope this apparatus may prove of some use to your readers.

Sir,—I am perhaps asking an impertinent question, but as it directly concerns me perhaps you will overlook this. It is: Why do we see so few Foreign Bird dealers advertise, especially those in the North? I am a great lover of all birds, especially foreigners, and have kept them all my life, or close on 40 years. Whenever business takes me to a town, I look for a bird shop. I am living near Middlesboro in Yorkshire, and don't know of a foreign bird dealer within many miles of here. I have heard there is one at Leeds, and one at Bradford. I would often take a trip as far as 50 miles to have a look round a bird shop and pick up a bird or two, but I can't say I know of any nearer than Hull, which is a very awkward place to get at from here. There are many trips from here, and my wife being a great lover of birds and a true help-mate to me, we could often take a trip together in quest of a bird or two, did we only know where to find them. I know the East of London is the bird lover's paradise, but that is rather too far. I have regularly taken Cage Birds, and have seen many changes in it. It is always improving and always to the front. I generally read it through, meaning advertisements as well, and have picked up some splendid birds through its pages, and have also sold many. Why a large bird dealer neglects to advertise I can't for the life of me understand. I am not alone in this, either. A foreign bird lover loves to look through a bird shop, and then if he sees what he wants, or what he thinks he wants, out comes the money. Perhaps a Leeds or Bradford dealer will put an advt. in just for my sake. I guarantee he will get a few pounds of my money. There are several dealers in the South that I can quite rely on to send me what I want, but what can equal the pleasure of a bird lover of admiring and picking out the bird he wants from among many more. I hope, sir, these remarks are not too personal.

Late Entries at the Crystal Palace Show.

Sir,—I have been rather busy of late, and consequently my reply to Mr. Ramsden's letter of March 8th has been delayed. Mr. Ramsden, in his latest contribution, even with your editorial note, fails altogether to explain away the grounds of complaint I have maintained throughout, namely, that my entries sent on the same date as in previous years were rejected, along with those of Mr. Smalley, while those of other exhibitors forwarded at the same time were accepted. My information as to the date when the entries referred to were sent in is absolutely reliable, and I, therefore, fail to see how any reference to Mr. Ramsden's books can alter the position at all. The point I mentioned as to the effect on the prize money, which the acceptance or otherwise of the entries would have, Mr. Ramsden ignores. With regard to the statement that my entries were received by the last post on Jan. 28th, as your representative was leaving, I have looked up my correspondence and find that the envelope in which my entries were returned from London, bears the time stamp, 5.15 p.m. This as your readers will readily grasp, shows that the entries were actually being dispatched from the post office in London by 5.15, and must, therefore, have been received by Mr. Ramsden in the early part of the afternoon, at the latest, and there is certainly no suggestion of "last post" about this. In order to dispel any possible doubt as to the correctness of my statement with regard to the time of the return of the entries from London, I have had the original envelope photographed. I enclose a copy, and shall be obliged if you will reproduce it along with this letter. Mr. Ramsden will recognise the reproduction as genuine, and I think it will show your readers that I have every justification for the position I have taken up.

E. Godley.

Mr. Ramsden's Reply.

Sir,—I am in receipt of your favour enclosing letter and photograph from Mr. Godley, and your request for an explanation. I unreservedly accept the accuracy of Mr. Godley's evidence as to the time of the return of his entries. I shall be glad if you, sir, will kindly reprint my letter and the footnote of your own to which Mr. Godley refers.

Mr. Ramsden's Letter, Published March 8th.

Sir,—Mr. Godley is in error in stating that I interfered with entries. I did my utmost for exhibitors, but after the catalogue was numbered I could not accept entries from anyone. I cannot admit the accuracy of Mr. Godley's statements re other exhibitors, as they do not agree with my books. I adhere to my previous statement, and I call upon your representative to state in a footnote whether he found the catalogue numbered throughout in numerical order when he called on the Tuesday (28th), and, after comparing his notes with the catalogue, whether I accepted further entries?

J. W. Ramsden.

[It is only fair to Mr. Ramsden to comply with his request, and we therefore endorse his statement—that the copy for the catalogue was complete and ready for the printers, with all entries numbered (by machine) in strict order, when our representative called on Mr. Ramsden on January 28th for particulars of the entry. It is quite clear that no entries were accepted after particulars were given us. Mr. Godley's entries were received by the last post on the Tuesday night as our representative was leaving after all our notes had been taken, and after the numbered copy for the catalogues was complete for the printers, and Mr. Ramsden expressed to our representative his regret that no course was open to him except to return them.—Editor.]

I was certainly under the impression when I wrote my previous letter (i.e. the one published on Feb. 22nd) that Mr. Godley's were the entries that arrived last post Jan. 28th. This letter was written from memory (my business, as Mr. Godley well knows, often takes me from home) On reconsidering the matter, in the light of Mr. Godley's last letter, I now distinctly remember that it was Mr. Nason's entries of Cinnamons which arrived by that post, and when expressing my regret to your representative, Mr. Fulljames, that they would have to be returned, I remarked what a pity it was, as I had just had to return more Cinnamon entries from Mr. Godley. I have no doubt now that it was the fact of my mentioning Mr. Godley's name in connection with these entries which caused your Mr. Fulljames, when asked by me (in the above letter) to corroborate my statement, to conclude that they were Mr. Godley's own entries. I adhere to my previous statement that no entries were accepted after the catalogue had been numbered, with one exception only, where I allowed a name to be altered, owing to a bird having died. Even if the acceptance of Mr. Godley's late entries with Messrs. Smalley's and Nason's in the Cinnamon section had involved the show in a slight loss, this would have been more than balanced by the profit which was represented by the other entries returned belonging to other sections in the show. Two instances are Mr. Whittaker's Norwich Plainheads and Mr. Dormer's extra stock entries, as is probably known to Mr. Godley, seeing that both these gentlemen also reside in Blackburn. As evidence that I am not at all desirous of being "disobliging" to exhibitors (as Mr. Godley seems to infer) I may say that I accepted the few entries that reached me first post on the Tuesday, but beyond this I could not go, and at the same time keep to contract with my printers. To avoid controversies of this nature in the future I shall evidently have to stick absolutely to the advertised date of closing, and refuse to oblige any exhibitors, no matter how reasonable their excuse for sending late entries may be.

J. W. Ramsden.

So far as the above matter concerns ourselves, we may say that our footnote was based upon what our representative, Mr. H. J. Fulljames (who called upon Mr. Ramsden on the evening of Jan. 28th, to obtain particulars of the Palace Show entry) recollected of the matter on March 5th, when Mr. Ramsden's letter reached us.—Editor.

IT ALL DEPENDS ON THE POINT OF VIEW!

A New Society is formed at Weymouth.

Sir,—A cage-bird, etc., fanciers' association has been formed for Weymouth and district, and I have been appointed secretary. Will all those desirous of joining kindly communicate with me, and I shall be pleased to give them full particulars as to membership. We want to make this a lively association, so shall be glad of all the support possible. There is a great need for a society here, and I feel sure it would stimulate interest considerably.

To Secure Swansdown Linings in Nest Pans.

Sir,—To fix the lining in the nest pan, sew same in with strong white thread passed by means of a needle through the air holes in the nest pan. Pass the thread through one hole from the outside of the pan and return it through the same hole, so as not to leave a large stitch inside for the birds to pull. Proceed to pass the thread through the other air holes and then tie the ends firmly. This obviates the use of paste, and when done with the thread may be cut and the lining pulled out.

For Preserving "Cage Birds" Coloured Plates.

Sir,—Having more plates than I could find frames for, I hit upon the following plan, and find it works excellently. First of all cut the white border off the picture, then paste it on a piece of three ply wood, half inch larger all round, then paint the wood border black, or stain it brown with permanganate of potash. When dry, give the plate put a coat of size, followed with a coat of picture copal varnish, or, if you leave out the size, two coats of the varnish. Two small picture eyes complete the picture, and I can assure you they look first class, and can be washed with soap and water.

Breeding with Bullfinches in South Africa.

Sir,—During the last breeding season I had a pair of Bullfinches, and brought out three nests of young Bullies, and in each case lost them when youngsters had been hatched out four or five days. The youngsters in each case were quite healthy when hatched, and had a mixture of 16 kinds of seeds, and plenty of egg food. The first round, as the eggs were laid I removed them, and put them under a Roller hen, as I did not like to trust the Bullie hen. The second round I left them with the Bullie hen, and she hatched four young, and kept them alive about five days. The third round I left them again with the Bullie, who hatched all out. Two died about 3 days old; the other two I transferred to a Roller hen with two of her own chicks about the same age. One died the third day after, and the other the fourth day, but she reared her own youngsters. The young Bullies were to all appearance quite strong and healthy when hatched out. This has quite baffled me, and I shall esteem it a great favour if any brother fancier will let me know if there is any particular method of feeding young Bullies. I am trying again this next season. I wish your valuable journal, Cage Birds, every success.

Some Observations on Early Birds.

Sir,—The past winter has been very mild and open, and in consequence the wild birds have started breeding very early. I have kept records now for years of the earliest nests of eggs and young, and in referring to my list I find that this season is the earliest yet recorded. I am not referring to a single nest, but nests. At the beginning of February I was informed of three Thrushes' nests with eggs, and the birds sitting; these were in gardens; also of two Blackbirds' nests, with the birds sitting. After a good many years' observation of these early birds, I have found that the Thrush is nearly always the first one to build and lay. I was told on good authority that a young Thrush fully fledged was found about the middle of January on St. Neot's Common. There will now be plenty of young Thrushes and Blackbirds about, and anyone wishing to raise these grand songsters will be able to get more cocks than hens from these early nests. Last year a friend of mine raised an early nest of Blackbirds, and out of the five young, four proved to be cocks. I have myself proved this to be the case with early Blackbirds many a time when I used to hand-rear these birds. If any of your readers go in for this hand-rearing of either Thrushes or Blackbirds, I should most certainly advise them to give them plenty of egg in their diet. An egg should be hard boiled, and then plunged into cold water for some five minutes. For one feeding a quarter would be sufficient. It should be finely chopped and mixed with double its quantity of very finely crumbled bread and then made quite sloppy with boiled new milk. On this diet I have been very successful with both these birds; the egg gives them plenty of stamina. Of course ants' eggs mixed with it would also be an advantage. We who live in the country cannot get the ants' eggs so readily as those living in towns where they are nearly always on sale at the seed shops, or bird dealers' establishments.

Some Reminiscences of an Old Bird Lover.

Sir,—How very ignorant and indifferent most people, particularly town people, are in regard to our pets—the most lovely, fascinating, and interesting living things our Creator has given us to admire. How many City men or women know a Tit from a Nightingale, or a Bunting from a Shrike? They know a Sparrow and a Canary; the rest of winged creatures are "birds," that's all. I recently showed a lady my large aviary in the garden—there were about 120 birds—all the best Britishers, hardbills and softbills, in the most glorious condition, just after the moult, Bullfinches, Goldfinches, Cirl Buntings, etc., etc., all like wax (as the experts term it). I explained to the lady how rare some of the birds were. She kept saying: "Oh!—Oh!—Oh!" At last I paused, expecting at least a well-deserved, "How beautiful! What lovely creatures!" Instead, came a cold matter of fact query, "But what are they for? What do you do with them? What is the good of them?" I felt a cold shiver, and was inclined to—(well, never mind, the Editor would not print it). I murmured something about "hobby—beautiful pets," but she cut me short: "Hobby? Birds? What a funny man you are! Fancy taking all that trouble about birds." She put her nose in the air, rustled her silks and marched off. Only a bird lover will understand my feelings. The same lady would go miles to see a blouse, or a novel hat with feathers. Yes, birdlovers are born, and are a separate class. I don't wish to praise them, as I am one of them, but I may say that indifference to such lovely creatures as birds surely indicates a callous disposition, and entire lack of sentiment. I was barely eleven years of age when I took a Golden-Crested Wren, two days old, and reared it into the most perfect specimen I ever saw in captivity. It flitted about the tea-table, and was the pet of the family. I then tried, as I always did as a boy, to teach it flying in and out of the window. It did fly into the garden of an old monastery, and that was the last I saw of it. Thrushes, Magpies, Jays, Shrikes, and an endless variety of other birds I reared as a boy (not forgetting four Jenny Wrens taken when only a few days old, with more or less success in taming them to keep flying about the house and garden. Mostly they were killed, being too tame. Four young Kestrels reared from the nest were rather an interesting lot. They became a terror of the little country town in which I resided as a boy. They darted into kitchen windows, snatching meat from the plates, and made so much mischief generally that I and my pets were voted absolute pests to the place, and I was sternly informed that I must cage them up. I meekly replied that I could not, because they did not come home at night; invariably I was delighted with each new success my pets achieved. But the end came when one of the glorious birds swooped into the kitchen of the forester's wife, snatched a piece of meat out of the frying-pan, and darted out again; the forester shot the four of them the same day. My next pet was a magnificent Kite, reared from the nest, a grand bird, exceptionally large, perfect in every feather, and as tame as a kitten. I used to carry him about with me, letting him fly at times, and one day he succeeded in getting hold of an old hen, and the schoolmaster saw it. He reported it to the City Fathers at the club that evening, and I was told that my pet would have to be destroyed the very next day. At dawn of day I left home with my pet, climbed a high mountain giving a glorious view of miles of beautiful forest lands, and then threw him high up into the air. He circled around me several times, and then settled in an old high beech tree. There I left him and went home, looking around at him as long as I could. Long after, I heard his majestic note—"ceah, ceah, ceah"—through the silence of the lonely forest. That parting was the first sincere grief my young heart had experienced. In after years, when roaming all over the globe, my interest in birds never ceased. In the North Atlantic, hundreds of miles from the land, I caught a beautiful Snow Owl. Off Cape Horn, also miles out at sea, in stormy weather, I caught Siskins (or a bird very similar) which alighted absolutely exhausted on board. In the China seas, after a dreadful typhoon, I was thrilled with delight one morning when I beheld the yards of the sailing ship I was in simply covered with many hundreds of the most gorgeously magnificent tropical birds imaginable. I might continue for hours to relate further bird stories; how we caught Sea Gulls, Cape Pigeons, Sea Swallows, and Albatrosses at Cape Horn and Cape of Good Hope, how we shot, or tried to shoot, the great Condor in Chili and Peru, about the Kiwi (Apteryx) of New Zealand, etc., etc.; however, no doubt the Editor thinks enough is as good as a feast; hence I conclude with best wishes to Cage Birds, and all bird lovers.

The Danger of Mouse-traps in Birdrooms.

Sir,—On returning from my spring holiday I was astonished to find that one of my Goldies had got out of his cage and in his search for food had put his head in one of the holes of a mouse-trap (which was baited with seed), and had been killed. I regret this very much, as he was in fine breeding form. The incident may convey a warning of an unsuspected danger. Wm. Jeffrey.

A Roller Society for the Potteries.

Sir,—It is with pleasure that I am writing to inform you, and our local Roller fanciers, that we, the Burslem and Dis. C.B.S., have started to form, in conjunction with our own, a Roller Society. We are anticipating putting some kind of a trophy up for competition amongst them. Therefore all who would like to compete must of necessity join by the time of our next meeting, date and time of which can be had from Cage Birds. We also have the rings to enable them to compete in the young bird contests. Particulars as to prices of same can either be had from me, or Mr. Watson, 6, Paradise Street, Tunstall, who is secretary for the Roller fanciers. Come to the front, Roller men, and make your hobby popular in this district.

Short Entries at Scottish Shows

Sir,—Let me assure Mr. Lambie that I am not in the least upset because his name appears under his epistles. But let me draw his attention to his letter of March 1st, wherein he advertised himself as having judged a few club shows, and said he was certain he gave the best of satisfaction without marking birds "soft" to cover faults. Now, neither the Fifer nor anyone else had asked whether he was a judge or not? He is, however, afraid it would be rather a hard task for him to satisfy all now. Why, Mr. Lambie, after your 15 years' experience in Fancy? Let me ask Mr. Lambie if "Clique Judges" were the cause of the short entries where he won his 1st prizes. He seldom, if ever, had full prize-money. And if "Clique Judges" were not the cause, will he endeavour to tell us the cause through your columns? Let me also ask him what he means by inviting the members of the B.F.C.C. to review the list of prize-winners (club specials). Does he infer that the B.F.C.C. specials are given to birds that are not the best in the various judges' opinions, or does he want them awarded on the "family system" in future? To Mr. Logan let me say that I am not defending any clique, but denying that "Clique Judges" are the cause of short entries at our Scottish shows. At first I attempted to give various causes, but for a considerable time have been too busy avoiding the mud slinging from what might be termed a clique of unsuccessfuls in various ways. Your last letter contains nothing worthy of notice, except your invitation to meet you in Edinburgh, which I am certain would serve no good purpose, save to satisfy your curiosity. But I can afford to smile while your informants fool you as to who "Plainhead" is, and what he is. I am going to tell you that he is a fancier who has won first prizes every year since he started. He has never exhibited with pigeon grit, or extra thick spare, as distinctive marks. He has never purchased his winners at 2s. each. He will again show, and win, and lose when the proper time comes. He has never had an offer of 10s. for one of his show cages; he can give four cages for that amount (excuse the advertisement). He has shown under most of our judges, but certainly showed most under the judges he did best under, and this will still be his future practice, all being well. He believes other fanciers can breed good birds as well as himself, and if he gets the opportunity of purchasing such birds, he tries to do so. He knows many causes for short entries in Scotland, which he will give later, with the Editor's permission. He knows many shows in England with good inducements for fanciers to give their best entries yet short entries and cancelled classes have prevailed. He knows it is easy to get plenty to criticise judges; he also knows that the most ready to criticise are the most likely to blunder. I may assure you, Mr. Logan, that I was very pleased with my success last breeding season, and hope for as good success this. No doubt five firsts (or less) in 15 years would naturally make a man believe that it was time for a change of judges! I do hope those who have set out to make themselves better known, in the Fancy will succeed in their efforts (if it's better than improving their stock). I may also say to Mr. Logan that I don't require to await the assistance of others before I reply to letters and hope he is not judging me by his own experience. Plainhead.

With the replies of Messrs. Lambie and Logan (if they care to send such), this correspondence must now close. We shall, however, be pleased to publish "Plainhead's" reasons for short entries whenever he chooses to forward them.Editor.

Sir,—As a reader of Cage Birds, and a bird-keeper, I would crave a word with Mr. Fairholme. No doubt ere this he has read the reply by the Secretary of Cage Birds League. I am with the latter in saying that Mr. Fairholme is certainly wrong in being against the keeping of wild birds in captivity. Wild birds, properly attended to, and kept in large cages or garden aviaries, are far better off than those exposed to nature. In my little garden there are dozens of poor little things who contribute to the neighbours' cats' dinners; by-the-bye, why not prosecute the owners of cats for letting their animals out of control? There is another point that I fear the humanitarian societies lose sight of—Bird-keeping is principally a poor man's hobby; now do they not think that it should be encouraged rather than otherwise? If they were to get amongst bird-keepers they would find this hobby has a softening influence, and, what is more, it keeps many a man from the public house. Another point, Mr. Fairholme, if you are against the keeping of wild bred birds (and I should say the argument applies also to animals) in captivity—what about that powerful example we have in Regent's Park? Surely before you condemn the poor man you should remedy the larger so-called evil?

H. C. Peerless.

Sir,—It was, I think, two years ago, almost to a day, that you promised to "blue pencil" all political matter which appeared in the letters of your correspondents, and I am therefore surprised to see that in your current issue a Mr. J. W. Cutmore has treated your readers to a miniature Radical address, and has out-Georged Lloyd in his vituperation of the "lazy rich." Now, sir, I have asked before in your journal, what connection exists between the Fancy and the "lazy rich" or any other sort of rich—or poor for that matter?—but could get no satisfaction from the many who replied. I will therefore content myself, at this juncture, by saying that a more ill-advised letter from the Fancy point of view, than that of Mr. Cutmore's could not well have been written. To begin with, his whine to the R.S.P.C.A. to attack someone else, is a distinct exhibition of "blue funk" and must serve as an encouragement to the Royal Society to pursue further its campaign against bird-keepers. His further statement that the Fancy is an "easy prey," must be good reading for its enemies, but I am sure it will not be appreciated by those who have followed the history of Cage Birds League, and have read the admirable articles of its secretary, or by any fancier who has backbone enough to prefer fighting to snivelling.

A. R. Coe.

[We are afraid our correspondent has "politics" on the brain. We fail to see any political significance whatever in Mr. Cutmore's letter; it deals with what are purely and simply questions of facts. And that "Facks is not polerticks" we have the assurance of a very celebrated philosopher.—Editor.]

The London Fancy Canary.

Why Not Resuscitate It?

Sir,—Has the London Fancy quite died out? For years now it has only been in the hands of a few fanciers, and those mostly old fanciers; no young ones seem to take this old variety up and give it life again. I don't believe there was a single bird shown last year; there certainly are no classes for the variety at any of our large shows, which I think is a great pity; for I don't like to see any variety go out of existence. Perhaps if it were "boomed" a bit it might come to life again. Cannot some of our wealthy men put up a good prize at our National show to give it a start once again and try and revive this once beautiful Canary? I believe it originally started in London. Why not London restart it? It is now over thirty years ago since I bred these birds, and many a time have I had them called mongrels by old fanciers, who said they were as rotten as a reed, and were not worth wasting time on, as they were only cross-breds. Well, I do believe they were cross-breds, but you can breed from cross-breds until you establish a pure breed, as it is done now so frequently in many varieties. What about new breeds of dogs, White Canaries, Blue Budgerigars, and poultry? In the days that I bred them, I had to continually inbreed to get the marking, and even then most of the young were mottled, which marks disappeared in the first or second moult. I have crossed them with the Lizard and back again for several years, and I did think that I made an improvement in them, although I certainly did not improve the Lizard. I have used strong robust Norwich with them to give them extra stamina, and then inbred them, which process, I think, much improved them, and was the means of getting several good even-marked Norwich without the eye marks; in fact, two pointed, so to speak. These markings were not fixed, only persisting for one or even two moults, but they were most beautiful birds to look at, and were much admired. Through illness I was not able to carry out the many experiments I had intended with these birds, and since those days in the eighties, I have not been able to get any more London fancies to experiment with and try to improve their stamina, and so get this once pretty variety on its feet again. The show plumage of the London Fancy does not last for many years, and that's where the young beginner would have a chance in taking up the variety. Its beauty is at its best the first year like that of the Lizard. Perhaps some old fancier could tell me which sprang into existence first, the Lizard or the London Fancy; my theory is that the Lizard did, and that the London Fancy is an off-shoot or sport from this now popular breed. I hope, Mr. Editor, that these few lines may be the means of this old variety coming to life again, and be catered for at one or more of our big London shows. Old Breeder.

THE HAND REARING OF BRITISH BIRDS.

By
S. A. SANDY
(London, S.E.)

The confiding ways and delightful tameness of hand-fed birds appeal to many bird-lovers, and to those who do not mind the trouble incidental to the process of rearing them, this contribution will prove very helpful.

AT this time of the year a few practical hints on the hand-rearing of some of the more common of our British birds may be useful to those of the readers of CAGE BIRDS who may by any fortuitous happening become possessed of a nest of youngsters which require rearing by artificial means. I well remember when as a boy I lived in what was then a pretty little country village in Kent, where such species as Blackbirds, Thrushes, Starlings, Larks, Jackdaws and most of the Finches abounded, and their nests could be found in abundance, my great delight before and after school hours used to be to tend to the wants of a hungry family of one of the first three named species, and I must confess it would still afford me infinite pleasure to be able to do the same.

The Days of Long Ago.

In those days, some thirty or more years ago, there was no useful information in the subject to be had by reading CAGE BIRDS, or putting a query on the point to an ever willing expert and getting to know all one desired. It was usually a case of a roughly made cage and a diet that only the fittest would survive upon. In fact, all we knew then was to give crushed hemp seed and soaked bread crumbs, with a little scraped meat and earth worms, so that it is small wonder that the percentage of deaths was high.

One may ask why should we go to the trouble of hand-rearing birds when we can get the same kind wild caught and tame them in a short time. True it is there is really little or no advantage in hand-rearing the smaller species of insectivorous birds, because they readily adapt themselves to cage life, and suitable treatment is usually all that is necessary, but, on the other hand, the larger species, such as Jays, Magpies, Missel Thrushes, and a few others are very difficult to tame if adult caught. I have seen some Thrushes that have been cage-moulted several times, and have still retained some of their natural wildness, and such are liable to ruin completely their plumage, perhaps just before a show at which their owner has reckoned them a "dead cert" for a prize. So that there is a very material advantage in hand rearing these species, and in having a delightfully tame bird that will eagerly look for some choice tit-bit which he knows you will give him, rather than keeping one that may remain what is commonly called a "cage duster."

A Job for Early Risers.

It is, however, of no use attempting to hand-rear birds unless one is prepared to do the thing properly, and that means that one must be "up with the Lark," for young birds require feeding from daylight to dusk; "little and often" should be the motto. It is no good giving youngsters a heavy feed and thinking they will last for several hours without food, for their digestive organs are very delicate, and unless properly and rationally fed they will soon succumb to troubles arising from indigestion. They should be fed every two hours or so at most, and not crammed until they can eat no more. One has only to think for a moment of the number of times a pair of birds feed their young in the course of a day, sometimes having to fly a considerable distance to obtain the supply, to see that one feeding by hand would be equal to many such mouthfuls as are given by the parent birds. Then, again, the artificial diet would be less easily digested than the natural one which the old birds would supply.

It is scarcely necessary to say that the cage in which the young are placed must be kept scrupulously clean, and particularly all excreta must be removed when the birds are fed while they remain in the nest, and after they have grown sufficiently to take to the perches the cage bottom must be thoroughly cleaned as often as necessary. It is a very good plan to have a fresh tray to insert when the soiled one has been removed for cleaning. Young birds, especially young Magpies, Jays and Jackdaws, soon get very dirty, and anything but a pleasure to look upon, if they are not well looked after in this respect. The principal ailment from which young birds, especially young Larks, suffer is cramp, and this is largely, I believe, brought about by improper feeding, although in the case of Larks it is desirable to cover the cage bottom with damp turf as soon as the young birds begin to run about.

During the First Stages.

Suppose one has found a nest of eggs and intends to take the young when the proper time arrives. A note should be made when the eggs are hatched, and the young ones should be taken with the nest on the tenth day after they are hatched, or, in any case, not later than the twelfth day. The reason for this is that up to the tenth day they "gape" for food readily, and are just showing the feather at the end of the quill, but if left after the twelfth day they frequently refuse to "gape," in which case they have to be forcibly fed by opening the bill with the thumb and forefinger and gently inserting the food. The nest should be taken and placed in a convenient sized cage with a good sized door in the centre, so that the young birds may be easily fed, and the cage front covered with some light linen material. The cage should be put in a quiet corner, free from draught, until feeding time.

Whilst on the question of the right time to take the young birds for hand-rearing, it might be worth recording the experiences of a friend of mine who, some few years back, successfully reared a good many youngsters that were either fledged and about to leave the nest, or had actually left the nest. Of course, at this age they most assuredly will not "gape" for food, no matter how hungry they may be. His method was to place the nest in a small cardboard box, well perforated at the top to allow of air, and, after "cramming" the youngsters, to put them away quietly for a while. Very frequently on opening the box again the birds would "gape," and then the trouble was over, for having once succeeded in getting them to take food there was usually very little further difficulty in rearing them, and many days' work was saved.

Where Great Care is Needed.

The greatest care must be taken that the food is perfectly fresh, and the vessels clean; and when the birds have so far advanced as to be able to pick up for themselves, they should at first still be fed several times a day. When they are entirely able to feed themselves they should still be given the food at frequent intervals in small quantities, so that they cannot gorge too much.

Mr. W. H. Phipps and his son, of Isleworth, near London. Mr. Phipps is an enthusiastic lover of Yorkshire and Norwich Canaries, which he successfully breeds and exhibits, and his boy bids fair to "follow in his father's footsteps."

Having dealt generally with the subject, I will treat of the various species that are most likely to be hand-reared, commencing with the Magpie, which, judging by the number of young ones that find their way to the London market, must be taken in considerable numbers. There should really be very little trouble in rearing these. Taken at ten days they will readily take food, which should consist of a mixture of soaked chicken meal (or puppy biscuit) crushed or ground to the size of hemp seed, two parts to, say, half part of fine crissel or meat meal, a little scraped raw meat, also a few earthworms and as many cockroaches or house beetles as can be obtained.

How to Avoid Diarrhœa in the Young.

As soon as the tails begin to grow to any length the birds should be placed in a large cage, say, 3ft. long by 18in. deep and a couple of feet high, with perches an inch in diameter at least. They should be fed about every two or three hours—a convenient means of giving the food is to take a piece of wood, say, half an inch wide, and shape it like a shallow spoon. The food should not be given "sloppy," or it is likely to set up diarrhœa, and should the birds show any signs of this a good thing is to put into the water a grain or two of permanganate of potash crystals, or even a little powdered chalk.

When the young are able to feed themselves, the stock food may be supplemented by mixing a little boiled potato, and chopped lettuce, or cress, dandelion, or chickweed, scraps from the table, and a dead mouse (or live one, for that matter, for it will very soon be dead when left to Mag's tender mercies).

The Jay is another bird that should undoubtedly be hand-reared, and a very nice pet it makes. It may be treated as regards feeding in precisely the same manner as the Magpie, with the addition of a little hard-boiled egg; the more beetles you can give it the better. When fully grown, the Jay, like the Magpie and Jackdaw, will eat almost anything, but it is very partial to newly-hatched birds, young mice, various berries, nuts and fruit.

The Jackdaw may also be reared in the above manner, but it will not be really necessary to give so much live food, for Jackdaws from their very early days may be said to be "as hard as nails." If anything, "Jack" will make more mess of his cage than either of the other two. Both Jays and 'Daws require roomy cages when they are fully fledged, with deep sand drawers and plenty of sand.

Each of the three last-named species may be trained to run loose about the garden, provided, of course, the flights of one wing are cut, and I really think this is the best way to keep them, as they will then be able to bathe freely. I have found all three are fond of their bath, and should be encouraged to take it as soon as they are old enough to do so.

Some Popular Species.

We now come to the Blackbird, Missel Thrush, and Song Thrush, all of which are better hand-reared, except that the song will not be as good as the wild caught bird, but what they lack in perfection of song they will amply make up for in tameness. The food for these birds must be of a somewhat better grade than recommended for the birds we have already discussed, and may be composed of very finely ground game meal 2 parts, fine meat meal 1 part, ants' eggs 1 part, and, say, one small hard-boiled egg per day to a nest of four birds, the whole well saturated with scalded milk. The food should be given in small quantities every hour when the birds are first taken, and a drop of water should be given afterwards. Every two or three hours will do quite well as they get older, and the food may be given less moist; well-scoured gentles, green caterpillars, blow flies, small beetles and mealworms, and finely chopped green food should also form part of the diet. A little scraped beef may also be given. Don't forget that roomy cages are required, and plenty of water for bathing. The Blackbird is also fond of fruit, such as strawberries, raspberries, etc.

It is little use attempting to rear these birds if found after they have left the nest, and not yet able to feed themselves. When they are fully grown and feeding themselves the hard-boiled egg will be unnecessary, but a little scraped raw meat may be occasionally given.

The Starling is the next species to claim our notice, and, although wild caught Starlings usually take very well to cage life, the most tame and amusing are no doubt those that are hand-reared. These birds should be taken not later than the tenth day, for I can say from experience that once they are past that date they get sulky and will not readily take food; in fact, those that I have tried were utter failures. They may be reared in the same way as Blackbirds and Thrushes, but after they are fully grown a diet similar to the Magpie will do very well, with gentles and earthworms added. If pains are taken to teach them from the early stages, Starlings make very good talkers, but do not resort to the cruel step of cutting the bird's tongue; this is as unnecessary as it is cruel, and certainly does not improve the talking powers of any bird. Starlings are very fond of a bath, and should be allowed access to a bath as often as possible.

The Sweet-Voiced Skylark.

The Skylark is another bird that, in my opinion, may easily be hand-reared, but I have found the young very subject to cramp, as mentioned above. I recommend the nest being taken with the young in it and placed in a cage on damp turf, and when the young ones begin to run about, turn some of the turf the reverse side up. In their natural state, as soon as they leave the nest they run on the damp earth, and in a cage I think the method I have suggested will be found to answer better than the dry sand. Of course they require no perches in the cage. A mixture of two parts crushed sweet biscuit, one part soaked ant eggs, half a part each of fine meat meal and hard-boiled egg passed through a perforated zinc sieve, the whole well moistened with scalded milk, will be found a suitable food to rear the young from the commencement—say 10 days' old—until they are fully grown, when the hard-boiled egg and milk can be dispensed with, and a food composed of two parts fine chicken meal, one part meat meal, and a half part of crushed hempseed, well mixed and moistened to a crumbly mass with grated carrot may be substituted. At first the youngsters should be given mealworms cut in halves, and small spiders, flies, and any small insects available. I should like here to say that a pair of small "tweezers" with the points filed blunt will be found a capital means of giving this food, as also the food for all the smaller species mentioned later.

The Ring Ousel and Dipper can both be reared, the former on the food recommended for the Thrushes, and the latter on the treatment described for the Lark. I do not however, think it is much use the novice fancier wasting time with the last-named bird.

A Use for Fresh Haddock.

The beautiful Kingfisher I saw successfully reared by that well-known fancier, Mr. Dewhurst, of Kensington, some years ago, and he succeeded by feeding on small strips of fresh haddock well washed in water, to remove, as far as possible, the traces of sea water. The birds were given the fish cut into strips as thick as a lead pencil, and an inch or so long, and when they could pick for themselves the strips were put into a shallow vessel of water.

The Woodpeckers should also all be hand-reared and taken at 10 days. They should be placed in a deep wooden box with the nest at the bottom and pieces of Virginia cork nailed round the inside of the box, and a covering of perforated zinc for the top of the box, until they are large enough to be put into a cage. This should be a large box-shaped one, lined with cork, and a good-sized door in the front. The food recommended for young Larks will suffice, but there must be a liberal supply of mealworms (cut up at first), well-scoured gentles, and wasp grubs; also as many spiders, flies and small smooth caterpillars as can be found. They are a hungry lot, and must be fed "little and often." All make very interesting pets. When they are pretty well grown, if they do not show signs of feeding themselves, a good way is, when feeding, to put a small piece of food or an insect on the cage wire, or on the cork lining, and try with the "tweezers" to tempt the birds to peck at it.

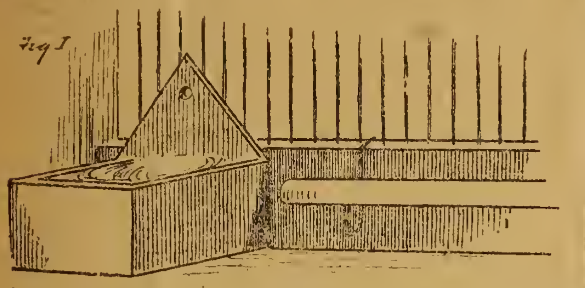
Some Topical Time and Labour Saving Tips.

Written and Illustrated by H. Norman (Carshalton).

Up to the present time the weather has not been particularly congenial for Canary breeders, and possibly the late starters will in the end be quite as successful as those who have already managed to get a nest or two of young ones well advanced. That being so, anything I may have to say in the following "Hints" upon nesting may not be too late for many, and we have still the second round to consider.

In pairing birds up the old-time way of putting the cock and hen in separate compartments, so that they may see each other, and get properly introduced, appears of late years to have fallen into disuse. To my mind it was a sound and safe method of procedure, and the benefit of it was more apparent when the second and third nests came along than when starting. If a hen is quite ready, almost any cock bird will put her to nest, but following that, frequent fights will often occur, or the nest may be pulled to pieces time after time by an ardent bird who has no particular regard for the hen he is forced to mate with. If he should be taken away and run with another hen one cannot rely upon him to assist in the feeding of the young birds.



I am still inclined to think that the old way of mating is the better where the pair are to be left together during the season, but where the cock is to be run with more than one hen the new method possibly has its merits. One sometimes has a difficulty in getting birds to take to their mates, and this will frequently occur where a last year's pair of birds have been parted for some reason, possibly because they were not a success as rearers, or because the offspring did not come up to expectations.

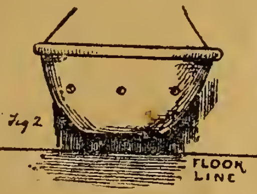
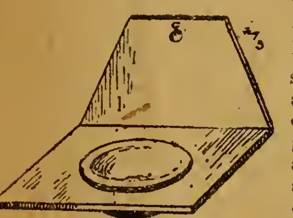
I have found in my experience that the cock is the chief offender in such cases, refusing to mate with the new partner selected for him, and treating her in anything but a gentle manner; he will bustle her from end to end of his cage, frequently calling to his old mate, unsettling himself and her. The best and really the only remedy is to remove him entirely from the room until the hen has gone to nest. When he is returned and sees that she has settled down to incubating duties, he is quickly reconciled to his new partner, and is seldom of any more trouble.

The lady birds have queer fancies, and will frequently persist in nesting in any corner but the one selected. It is a mistake to force them to take to the nest pan in just a certain position; it is much the better plan to humour them as far as possible and in some way fix a box or pan in the place selected by them. This is frequently a difficult matter, but can sometimes be managed by the exercise of a little ingenuity.



As an instance, I once had a hen that would persist in nesting in a corner under the front perch, and, although I tried every method I could think of, she would nest there or nowhere. I took out the front perch, cut a piece off, returned it, fixing it in place by bent wire, and put a box in the corner (sketch No. 1). I tried her with a nest pan first, but she would have none of it, but readily took to the box and did well.

One of the difficulties fanciers have to contend with, and which frequently ends in a serious loss, is that the parents accidentally pull the young out of the nest. The little mites get nestled up in the feathers, and are not heavy enough to stay in the nest when the old one comes off, and so they are dropped to the floor of the cage, and if not found quickly perish. A good thickness of sawdust should be placed immediately below the nest. Then, if such an accident should happen, the little one will not injure itself by falling, and will retain a degree of bodily warmth much longer than he would on the bare board.

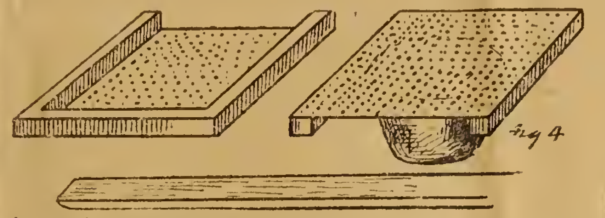


A Good Method of Fixing the Nest.

A good method is to fix the nest at the beginning as low down as possible, just clearing the drawboard (Fig. 2). After the first week it may be raised, if thought desirable, but, personally, I can see no benefit by having the nest pan high up. The old style of having a board across one end of the cage, with a hole cut in it to drop the nest pan into, appears to have gone out of favour, although it had many advantages. There were also some disadvantages, the principal of which was the trouble with red mite, for undoubtedly the plainer a cage and its fittings, the less harbour for these little blood-suckers.

In a fancier's room last summer I saw a modification of the board and nest that was particularly satisfactory. It consisted of two pieces of thin board fastened at right angles to each other, and having a hole cut in it to receive the nest pan (Fig. 3); it was then hung up at the back or side of the cage, in the usual manner. Twice during the season this breeder found young ones on the board just outside the nest, and these he had no difficulty in saving: the old birds fed the young from the board.

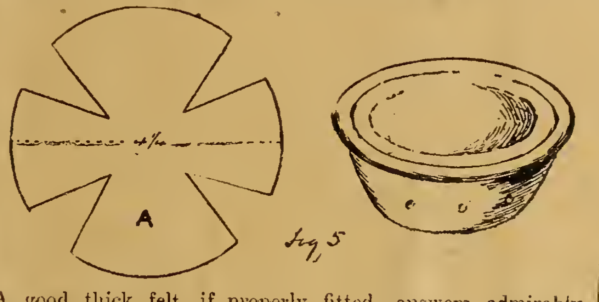
The only objection to this method is that as the birds grow the accumulation of excreta at the edge of the nest is more than is desirable; of course, this could be cleared, or the nest removed to an ordinary bracket when there is no danger of the young falling out. For the benefit of the novice I may mention that one should never despair of saving the life of a young one thrown out of the nest, although to all appearance it may be dead and quite cold. Place the bird between the hands (which should be quite warm), breathe on it for fully five minutes, and, when it shows signs of life, place it back in the nest; the hen will warm the unfortunate one, and you will see no difference between it and the others.



The Mixing of the Egg Food.

There are several methods of mixing egg food for the parents to feed the young, and after many trials I have found nothing to equal the pressing of the egg through perforated zinc. Make a frame by nailing together three pieces of wood one inch thick, and about nine inches long; upon this nail the perforated zinc. A length of hard wood, one inch and a quarter wide, makes a good spatula, with which to press it through the holes in the zinc. A handful of biscuit worked through the zinc will clean it. It will be seen by Fig. 4 that this utensil will also be found useful for cleaning seeds, and getting rid of the husks, which can be blown off at the open end.

Just two suggestions for lining the nest pan. In the early part of the season the lining cannot be too warm.

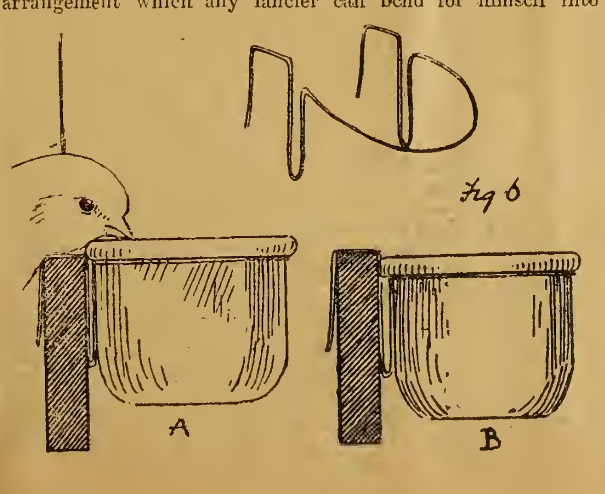


A good thick felt, if properly fitted, answers admirably. Make a template out of thick card or zinc, as per Fig. 5A. Place this on the felt, and cut out the desired portions. When fitted the exact size of the pan sew the edges together with strong thread. This makes a particularly warm lining, and should the hen refuse to have any moss and hair in the nest (as some of them do), is quite cosy enough as it is.

Another method is to cut the lining out of ordinary flannelette and paste into the pan with good starch paste; this is not so warm as the felt, and more suitable for second and third nests. The hens will often try to pull it out, but if the paste is properly made they are unable to do so, and, if given plenty of material, will soon turn their attention to the proper article.

Put the Drinkers on properly.

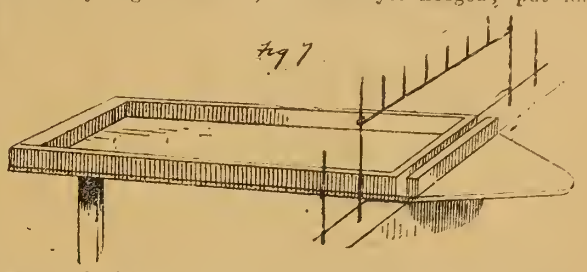
The water supply during the summer months should be ample, and great care should be exercised in fitting the drinkers so that the birds can easily get at it. Although bird fanciers as a rule are careful men, they frequently overlook some of the lesser items which, if not actually hurtful to their charges, cause them a great deal of unnecessary inconvenience. In visiting a fancier's room last season I noticed one of the drinkers in such a position that the bird could scarcely get at the water. The lip of the drinker was placed above the front rail, thus lessening the size of the pot hole, and making it quite an effort for the bird to squeeze its head through and secure water. Fig. 6A will give an idea of how this drinker was fixed. The bird could certainly get water, but not easily. Fig 6B shows one properly fitted, and it also shows the wire arrangement which any fancier can bend for himself into a holder suitable for the glass drinkers now pretty universally used; these drinkers are easily cleaned and the water quickly changed.



Something every Breeder should use.

The feeding board for young birds somehow does not seem to "take on" among southern fanciers, and yet it has advantages claimed for it by those who use it regularly. I have endeavoured in Fig. 7 to give a sketch of it. As will be seen, it consists of a flat board with thin strips all round it, with a groove for the cage door to shut down into, and one leg to stand on at the other end. The drawing shows it in use, and it is claimed that young birds learn to feed themselves from it far more quickly than from an egg pan placed on the floor. One cannot keep the young birds too long in the nest, so long as the old birds look after them well, but as soon as they are out and about the earlier they fend for themselves the better.

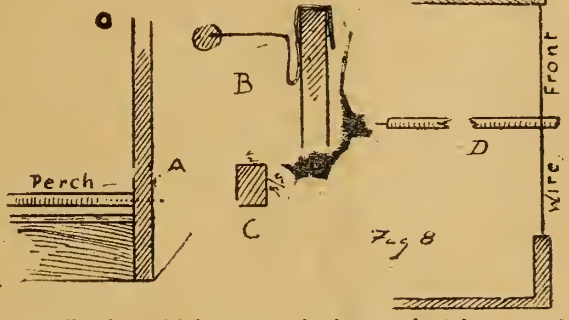
I cannot bring myself to believe that perches should be all one uniform thickness; the toes of a bird's foot are almost as plastic as our fingers. They can grip both large and small sticks, and that with a force hardly conceivable to the uninitiated. If anyone has doubts, let him take a young Great Tit, one not yet fledged; put him against the bark of a tree or a small twig, let him get firm hold, and then pull him away. So tightly can he hold that one is almost afraid of dislocating the leg. That being the case, it appears to me that birds' claws are made to grip perches of various sizes, and, although one might use the same size ones on all cages without ill-effects, the bird would experience more comfort from some of different thicknesses.



The fixing of the perches is a matter of considerable importance, firstly, to ensure that the birds take sufficient exercise, and secondly, that they are not placed one below the others, so as to get fouled by droppings. They also should be easily removable. It is almost impossible to keep them always scrupulously clean, but still, if we have them so that they can be easily got at, or taken out, we should be able to maintain a degree of cleanliness.

Perches and their Fixing.

Many fanciers do without a front perch entirely, the birds having to descend to the floor of the cage when seeking food and water. It seems to me that birds keep cleaner with a front perch, and there is really no difficulty in fixing it. Cut the wood to fit fairly tightly against the sides, put in position, and nail each end, but do not drive the nail home, leave it projecting about an eighth of an inch, as in Fig. 8A, then with a pair of small pliers this can easily be withdrawn, and the perch taken out for cleaning purposes when required. The other method is with bent wire, as depicted at B.



There are many ways of fixing the perches from front to back, and one of the simplest is to cut the perch a shade thicker one side than the other, say, half an inch by five-eighths, as at C. Let them be an inch longer than the distance from back to front, insert a piece of wire at one end, make a hole in the cage back, push the wired end into it, give a half turn, and the perch is firmly fixed (see D). The only objection to this method is that the arrangement hardly looks so neat as when firmly fixed to the wired part, but the advantage in taking them in and out for cleaning purposes is so great that we must sacrifice appearance to utility.

The True Charm of a Bird's Song

It has been said of the Ring Ouzel, or, as he is locally called, the Mountain Blackbird, that his song is somewhat monotonous and derives its principal charm from the surroundings in which it is heard. The same may be said with equal truth of the songs and call-notes of the majority of birds. There is nothing intrinsically attractive about the barking croak of a Raven, but, says a writer in the "Manchester City News," among the steep rocks towering above a lonely tarn in the Welsh mountains one cannot hear it without a thrill of pure pleasure. The cry of a Curlew on the moors, the ceaseless chatter of a Sedge Warbler by a chalk-stream, and, again, the crooning of a Turtle Dove in a peaceful, secluded thicket, delight one less because they have any special musical qualities than because they fit, or through long association seem to fit so admirably with the surroundings in which they are heard.

SIBERIAN GOLDFINCHES
How to Keep and Exhibit Them.

By JOHN HENDERSON
(Edinburgh).

A Scotsman who possesses the present-day champion Finch gives less-favoured mortals an insight into his methods of management.

"Nancy's tae the greenwood gane
Tae hear the Gowdspink chatterin."

So runs the old ballad. How I wish we could accompany her now; but, alas, the days of "chatterin'" Goldfinches are over so far as Scotland is concerned. Scotsmen nowadays cannot so easily procure the type of "Britisher" that used to fill their eye, and have turned to a bird which is superior for muling and exhibition purposes. The "Siberian Goldfinch"—it really does not matter to us whether they come to this country from Siberia or not; they are so named, and we accept them as such. I remember well my first experience in buying Goldies. A friend of mine, an old hand, used to keep birds of all sorts. I frequently visited his place, and so became fired with ambition—nothing would content me until I had a bird of my own.

My First Love—and My Last.

My first love was a Goldfinch, and I have preferred the Goldfinch ever since. Away I went and bought two lovely birds. I took them home, caged and cared for them as if I had nothing else to think about; but alas! my young love proved false. Now I know, however, and regret, that it was I who was untrue, in the sense that I did not care for them in the proper way. How often I wish that I could now have those birds, and some of the others that succeeded them, for as I look back it seems to me that then we could get better and finer Goldies than we do now. Old things, like old loves, may seem best, but in this case I venture to think that I am correct.

Disappointments did not prevent me from trying again until at last I succeeded in moulting one out, and it was to me a triumph, although the bird was not an exhibition specimen. However, I had climbed the first step—the rest seemed easy. As time went on I got into touch with other fanciers, getting the benefit of their experience, and I read Cage Birds with avidity every week, so collecting and storing up the knowledge that enables me to keep and show foreign Goldfinches to-day. It does seem strange that this Finch should be such a favourite in Scotland, especially around Edinburgh) that it has been so for years, the entries in its class at the shows will testify) for it is no more difficult to keep than, nor does it differ in habits from its smaller relation of England and Wales.

Obtaining the "Rough Diamond."

To obtain a real good bird, I cannot suggest a better thing than to go to a respectable dealer who has a reputation to lose (it is still possible to find one) and tell him what you want and your price. Foreign Goldfinches arrive in Britain generally from November until February. The wholesale firms may get them cleared away at once, or may not, according to the demand. Of course, if they are "specials," they don't have long to wait. We will suppose, however, that your local dealer has received a few "sticks" of Goldies, and you have received the news. You will be eager to have a look at them for a possible "champion." Allow me to give you a little humble advice before buying.

In the first place, look for a young one. This is not a simple matter, but as a rule one can be guided, to a certain extent, by the appearance of legs and claws. Do not mind if they seem wild, in fact, I like them so, as it usually is an indication of health and vitality. Carefully examine the excreta on the bottom of their wicker cages, and have nothing to do with the occupants of any that are "whitewashed." Very pretty the birds look in the little white cages, and unless you possess the comparative eye it is difficult to pick the best out of the "stick" of seven. When you have gone over this lot carefully, ask your dealer to run those you prefer out into show cages, separately. Then you ought to be able to judge which you think is best. Do not expect to find a champion ready-made. You are buying them "in the rough," and the polishing rests with you.

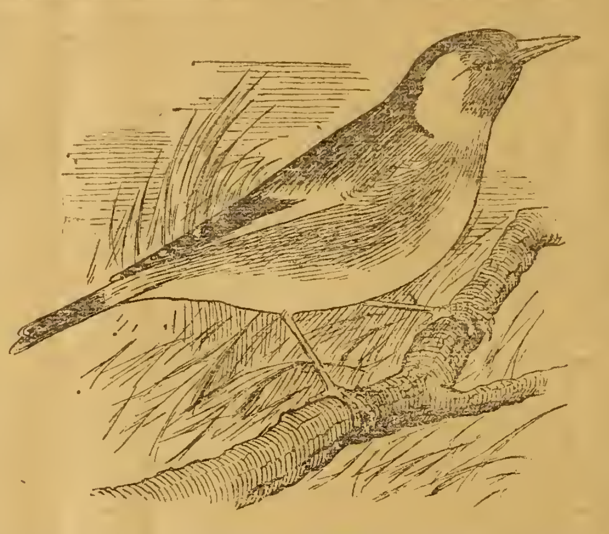
Management that has Succeeded.

Now you have got your bird, naturally you would like to keep and treat it to the best advantage. To begin with, put it into a good sized box-cage, with water both inside and out for the first few days or until you observe him drinking from the outside. Cover the cage-bottom with clean, sharp gravel. I do not like sawdust or chaff, as it always gets blown about, fouling the water, etc., especially so with a wild bird. I will tell you how I feed mine, but before doing so let me say that I do not think it possible to prescribe a given diet for Goldfinches in general. They are just like ourselves, and have their likes and dislikes; what one eats, another despises, and one must study them individually to obtain the best results.

During my novice days, kind and well-meaning friends told me not to give much hemp seed, and I still notice that from time to time the same thing crops up. One hears of wonderful birds which are fed and moulted principally on canary seed. It may be possible, but on the other hand if hemp had been given they might have moulted out champions. I have never lost a bird by giving it, and they get as much as they care to eat. As a regular mixture I use hemp, teazle, inga, and sunflower throughout the year. I give wild seeds of all suitable kinds, such as thistle, hardhead and cornflower. I am of opinion that these wild seeds, with the previously mentioned fatty seeds, make the best possible combination. During the early months of the year, I procure young and tender dandelion leaves; later on the buds and flowers and groundsel tops. Later on goatsbeard will be found in abundance; this is very useful and Finches delight to work at the tough exteriors—in fact they seem to appreciate most that which is hardest to get.

Give An Eye to the Future.

As the year goes on you will always find something new to offer and derive pleasure from your rambles in search of it. Generally about August the hardhead is in bloom, and this is my favourite. I give it as soon as I can, even in its flowering stage. When it is ripe I collect and tie it up into little bunches, and store it away in quantities, sufficient to last until I collect again the following year. Fruits of all kinds are enjoyed, especially rasps and strawberries—they love to pick off the seeds, but don't seem to care much for the pulp. Rowan berries and blackberries are also extremely useful, and as they are ready during the moulting time, I always have them about. Perhaps you may find some difficulty in procuring all the various things I have mentioned, especially if you happen to live in a city; but do your best—you won't regret it when the moult is over. Give as large a variety of food as possible. They will take what suits them; more you cannot do.



Mr. Henderson's noted Siberian Goldfinch, a winner of many prizes, including Firsts at Bathgate, the Scottish National (Edinburgh), and the 1912 and 1913 Crystal Palace Shows.

I now come to the most important period in the existence of a Goldfinch, that is, the moult. Your bird has been storing up all his energy and concentrated colour derived from the various foods given during the last few months to help Nature to accomplish this successfully. You must also lend assistance. To obtain the best results, the bird must be moulted outside. True, one comes across birds which have been moulted in cages indoors, and have come through fairly well, but there is always an indescribable something awanting which is noticed when comparing them with the birds moulted outdoors. I do not possess a garden wherein I could erect an aviary, so have to be content with another arrangement, on a smaller scale. I made a large cage to fit into the outside of a room window about 4ft. by 4ft. 3½in., with a sloping wood roof, and covered with half-inch wire-netting. I find that it answers the purpose well. It also has the great advantage of a Southern exposure, and being some 30ft. above ground, is out of the way of cats.

Living the Outdoor Life.

I put the Finches in about May, and allow them to remain until the end of October, as the weather permits. On the floor of the cage I place a large shallow bath, as it is most important to success. Goldfinches, when kept indoors in a small cage do not care much for a bath, but when outside will revel in it, especially when first put in. During warm weather, the water should be frequently renewed. I arrange the perches so as not to be over the water or food, and always have plenty of clean gravel strewn on the bottom. During the warm weather, care should be taken to keep everything clean, especially the drinking-water.

Towards the end of October the birds ought to be fit to be taken back to their winter quarters. It is not likely that they will be finished, but now that you have them caged separately you have more opportunity to further help them. They will probably be a little wild at first, but after a time that will pass away. The head is the last to moult, and in some cases it is slow. The blaze will no doubt be dull and bronzy-looking, but day by day you will observe it coming up in colour gradually. The same with the tan, which at first will appear dingy.

I keep the Goldies in a cold room during the winter, and have often been amused to see them trying to bathe on the ice covering their bath. Be sure to give them plenty of good sound seed at this time, as they will want a lot of building up after their ordeal of the moult, and no doubt will be on the thin side. If so, I give them a little boiled rape seed every-day, with a little maw seed. To guard against constipation a pinch of Epsom salts in the drinker occasionally, keeps them right. Do not give other medicine unless they really require it, and then be sure that you understand the trouble, and what to give for it.

Your bird moulted, your attention is now directed to the show bench. The majority of show committees in Scotland provide a class for foreign Goldfinches, but with the exception of the Scottish National they do not receive the entries they deserve. I fancy the reason is that most shows are held before the birds are ready, or it may be perhaps that fanciers have not the same class of birds in their keeping as formerly, and so are loath to exhibit. Never mind, let us show the best we have. Having decided on the show, it will now be necessary to prepare your bird for it. Enter it in good time, be sure of the conditions, etc., in prize list, and be clear about your means of conveyance to and from the place of exhibition. As to show cages, I think that nothing is better than those enamelled black outside and sap green on wires and inside. They are made here of a uniform size, and are not expensive.

Putting on the Finishing Touches.

The next thing to do is a very ticklish one, i.e., to wash the bird. I generally do so about four days previous to a show, using Lux for the purpose. Pay particular attention to the whites; they must be clean to improve the colour contrast. I use a fine soft-haired toothbrush for the blaze, taking care of the eyes. When the birds are almost dry, spray lightly with cold water, and do so every day until their dispatch. Endeavour to get them to dress and preen themselves as much as possible; some birds are very lazy in this respect, but keep working with them until they do, for herein lies the secret of polish and neatness of feather. Above all, be sure that you put them into extra clean cages after the wash, for if not you will undo all. They have a habit of rubbing their damp cheeks on the perches, consequently, if the latter are dirty, the dirt adheres and is most difficult to remove.

Nothing now remains to be done except dispatch your bird and await the result of your labour with patience. You have done all you can. Do not be disappointed if you do not at first succeed. Try again, and in the end you are bound to do so. I have given you my humble experience—no doubt very imperfectly, but if it should prove of use to Cage Birds readers, and in any way help to promote increased interest in this lovely bird, the Foreign Goldfinch, the pleasure will be mine.

Wayside Seeds and Berries for British Birds.

Beech (Fagus sylvatica).—A handsome tree, on which grows the beech-mast, an excellent food for Hawfinches, Bramblefinches, and also all the Tit family. I find this a most nourishing food, and for moulting Hawfinches and Bramblefinches fanciers can get nothing better. Gather in large quantities and store in a dry place for future use. It will keep a twelvemonth.

Mistletoe (Viscum album).—The only British species, and well known. A most useful berry for all Thrushes.

Hawthorn (Cratægus oxyacantha).—Of the berries the Blackbirds and Thrushes are exceedingly fond. The Hawfinch is also very fond of the stones of this fruit. Large quantities should be gathered, as I find them most useful in helping to bring out the desired colour of the Hawfinch.

Strawberry Tree (Arbutus unedo).—A handsome tree, with white flowers and scarlet fruit, something like our garden strawberry, and a grand fruit for all Thrushes, assisting greatly in bringing out the colour of these birds. Store in sawdust for winter use.

Rose Box (Cotoneaster Simonsii).—A handsome garden climber, with scarlet berries, readily eaten by all Thrushes, Hawfinches, and Greenfinches. Store in sawdust for winter use.

Ivy (Hedera helix).—Known to all. Fruit jet-black, and greatly relished by all Thrushes and Hawfinches. Store in sawdust for winter use.

Flowering Currant (Ribes albidum).—Pretty plants with scarlet flowers and pale blue fruit, a very useful fruit for Thrushes, Hawfinches, and Blackcaps.

Elderberry (Sambucus nigra).—A pretty tree with cream-coloured flowers and purple fruits; a most excellent food for all Thrushes, Waxwings, and Blackcaps. I find this a valuable fruit for moulting and winter use.

Honeysuckle (Lonicera periclymenum).—A handsome climber, with bright scarlet fruit, and one of the best colouring berries for Bullfinches, Thrushes, and Waxwings. These and rowan berries are the best natural colouring agents for Bullfinches that I know of.

Bay Laurel (Prunus laurocerasus).—A well-known hedge plant with large red fruit; a favourite of all Thrushes.

Portugal Laurel (Prunus lusitanica).—Handsome shrubs, with scarlet berries; most useful for Thrushes, Hawfinches, and Bullfinches, as they have great colouring properties. Hawfinches are also exceedingly fond of laurel stones.

Mountain Ash or Rowans (Pyrus aucuparia).—Well-known trees, and bearing one of our most useful berries for colouring Bullfinches. Given along with honeysuckle berries they will bring out your Bullfinches a champion colour. They can be kept in sawdust for over a twelvemonth.

I intend advertising all these seeds and berries in Cage Birds during the next season, so as to give every reader a knowledge of them.

MY SOLOMON ISLAND COCKATOOS.

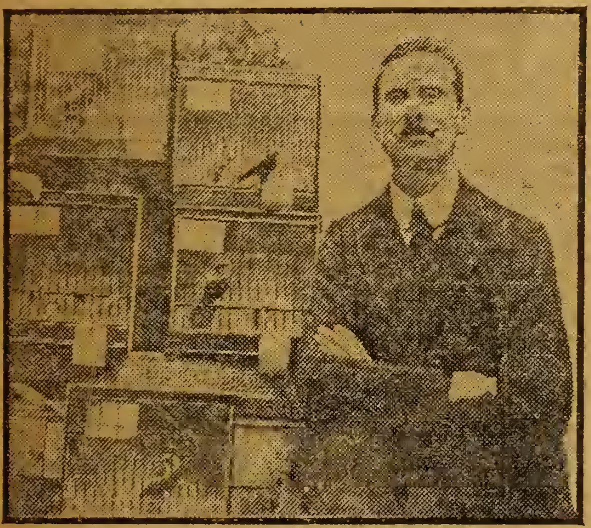
By
the Rev. C. D.
FARRAR.

This article on a rare species indigenous to a far-off island in the South Pacific is No. 36 of the new series of personal birdy experiences being related under the above title.

I ONCE had a personage among my many feathered dependents that could not be ignored. This was a small white Cockatoo with a yellow crest, the property of an old gentleman living right down in the South of England. How I came to own him I am going to tell you. I saw one evening, in one of the bird papers, the following enticing notice: "A Solomon Island Cockatoo, what offers?" Here, I thought, is a chance of getting a bird on the cheap. I sometimes see such strange offers made for birds that I quite thought I should get this one for a mere song. Not long ago an enterprising advertiser offered an electric bell in exchange for any sort of bird. I thought after that I might be able to effect an exchange, at least, for the gentleman from the Solomon Group. At any rate, there would be no harm in trying.

The Tale of a Hasty Bargain.

Later, I wished I had kept my offer to myself, but this is a long story, as you will see, if you have the patience to read to the end. I wrote off that very night. I never can wait, as my readers know by this; and I inquired what the owner specially needed. By return of post there came back a long and most amusing letter, telling me that if only I would take the bird I could have him for nothing. Who had ever heard of such generosity? I might have known, had I had more sense, that there must be some reason for such generosity to a stranger. I learnt the reason later. Off went my wire. "Please send the bird on at once." By the rapid response I now believe that the owner parted with that bird without sorrow. He came in about twelve hours in a big soap box, or what was left of it. I verily believe that had the journey been a few hours longer, I should merely have received a bundle of match-wood, and probably a polite note from the North Eastern Railway that the contents (live stock) had apparently escaped en route.



A KEEN SOUTH COUNTRY FANCIER.

Mr. E. G. Kew, of Margate, who is a great lover of the Norwich Plainhead, and has had excellent success when exhibiting his favourites.

A Bird with a "Business End."

As it was, Master Solomon had only managed to get his fore part loose, and a very ugly-looking fore part it was. A great blueish beak that looked capable of cracking the most obstinate Brazil nut that ever grew, and a wicked little red eye that looked the very incarnation of devilry. As I gazed on that ruined box, I felt myself asking, "If he can do this in a few hours, what will he manage in a week?" I wrote and asked his late owner what would hold him. There came back the laconic reply, "Only a wrought-iron cage." Then there followed, what had been carefully conceded while the transfer was still incomplete, the awful intelligence that he was capable of destroying a room in a few hours, at least the wooden portion thereof. "We put him," I was told, "in a disused bedroom; and when we went to look the next morning we found everything in ruins. He had practically destroyed the four poster bed, and was busily at work on the window sashes; the room looked like a carpenter's shop." I thought; this is a nice prospect for the Vicarage. I did not mention this fact to my family!

Down the Drain.

Of course, he had to be put somewhere; we shut him out in the garden, and put him into a very shabby and mean lean-to. But before I encaged him, I took the precaution to cover the wood-work with aviary netting on the inside. I prided myself that even Solomon could not cut through this sort of stuff; and I covered the roof with zinc sheets. On the morning he arrived, I got a second cheering letter, telling me that quite recently he had managed to escape into the street, where they were taking up the drains. Being unable to fly very well, he had scrambled along the heaps of cast up soil, and had managed to overbalance, and had toppled down to the bottom of the cutting, some 14 feet deep. One of the men, for a few pence, offered to catch him. Down he jumped and grabbed Solomon, as he thought. He was mistaken. Hardly had his eager shout reached the surface: "Please, sir, I've got 'im," when there came an agonised scream: "By gum, sir, but he's got me;" and so he had, if a hand streaming with blood means anything. However, the captor held tight, and wrapping a cloth round the prisoner, managed to secure him.

As I looked at the shattered box in which my friend was secured, I pictured the whole scene, and thought how best to avoid a like fate. I swore that nothing should induce me to put my fingers into the power of that murderous beak, so I took him out, box and all, prized off the lid with the kitchen poker, flung the box on the floor, and allowed Solomon to scrambled out as best he could. He seemed considerably ruffled by his fall, and taking a firm hold on the broken lid, hauled himself slowly out, and I never saw such a wicked expression on a bird's face. It reminded me of the look one sometimes sees on the faces of elderly relations who get bills young hopefuls cannot pay. I read in that little red eye an expression which seemed to say: "If only I had hold of your hand, I would teach you what I think of throwing a respectable bird about like that!" I was thankful he couldn't put his amicable thoughts into deeds.

To my horror, I found the bird could talk, a horrible sort of pidgin English with dreadful swear words thrown in to suit the occasion. The things that bird said, as he waddled about made my hair stand on end. Once out of his late prison house, he began slowly and sedately moving about the floor, helping himself over any obstacle with his powerful beak, chattering and chuckling to himself, saying thunderous things about me, and looking exactly like one of those stout, important, white-waistcoated old men who are "something in the city."

The peculiarity of this bird is that he never goes round anything, he always makes sraight for the goal he has in view; he climbs labouriously over everything in the way, up one side, over it, and down the other. In after days when we became familiar, he would climb up me, and insist on my scratching his poll, and under his wings, for hours on end. Any attempt to leave off, or a hasty movement of your hand, and he would turn instantly and rend yon. He had a short cruel beak, and we were all terrified of it; for it hurt considerably. I don't think he ever really liked me; in fact, I believe he despised me; but he was perfectly well aware that I was frightened to death of him, and so should have to go on scratching for hours at his pleasure. I was often reminded of the line of the well-known hymn:—

"When shall these labours have an end?"

A Wife en Deshabille.

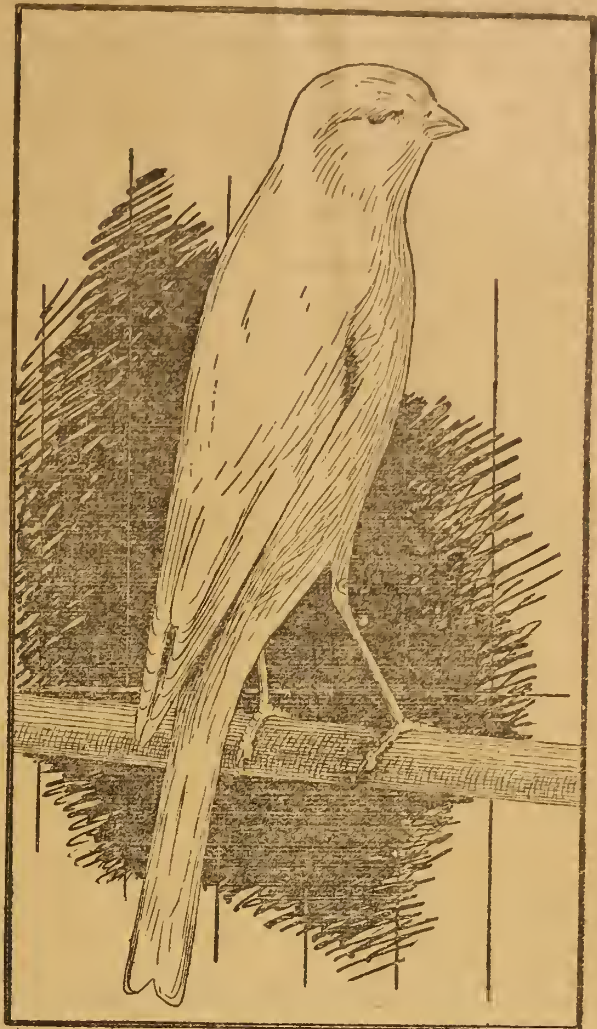
I had been the unhappy proprietor of Solomon only for a few days, when his late owner wrote saying he had a lady of the same race, would I accept her, as now that Solomon was gone he had no use for her; in fact, he was afraid she was pining away for the loss of her late partner? I thought, "In for a penny in for a pound," and if my life was henceforth to be a burden, I might as well go and meet trouble half way. Accordingly, I wired: "Send her on." When I opened the box, I nearly laughed myself into a fit; you never saw such a strange object as crept out. It was a female Cockatoo, with hardly a feather on her. She was practically indecent in her bareness. Her head was perfectly bald, except for two or three crest feathers, very rakishly set on. What the delicate minded young lady once described as "the front of her back" was red and angry looking, and quite devoid of feathers; her shoulders were as exposed as those of some scraggy old dowager going to court, and she had only about half-a-dozen tail feathers left. Of all the disreputable objects I ever set eyes on; she was certainly facile princeps.

I took her out and introduced her to Solomon, who, in spite of his past dealings with her, seemed over-joyed to see her again. The unearthly row these two birds made, saluting each other, was enough to wake the dead. They yelled and shouted like two stone-deaf people trying to make each other hear. Each time they spoke, up went their crests, out went their wings, and then they fairly let themselves go. You could hear them a mile away at our station quite plainly.

An Effective Alarum.

They usually began to talk about 4 a.m., and continued with brief intervals for sleep and food until dusk. There was no such thing as sleep from the moment these two birds awoke in the morning. I have said things to these birds as I lay in bed that I trust the Recording Angel has mercifully forgotten. The neighbours complained. Several said they would have to go if these birds didn't; and yet people say that the English are lovers of Nature! I felt that if I wanted these Cockatoos to reproduce their kind, there was no time to be lost. I was sure that one summer would try the very stoutest nerves. Accordingly I got a real hard log with a nice hole in the side, which I felt sure they would quickly enlarge. I did not libel them. In a few days that log was a wreck, a charge of dynamite might have been exploded inside it. It reminded me of "Casabianca," which I once had though painfully to commit to memory in childhood.

The boy, oh where was he?
Ask of the waves, which far around
With fragments strewed the sea!



THE MASSIVE LANCASHIRE PLAINHEAD

This fine specimen of the breed was exhibited at the Horticultural Hall Show by Mr. W. Kay, of Macclesfield, and won first prize.

I might have asked a like question about the "log." Mrs. Solomon, or, as I christened her, with what I thought beautiful appropriateness: "the Queen of Sheba," spent most of her time in the fragment of what had once been a log; but whether intent on nest-making, or whether she regarded it as a harbour of refuge, I could never quite determine. I rather inclined to the latter theory. She began to grow a few feathers, but as fast as they assumed decent proportion, Solomon religiously removed them; evidently he did not believe in female adornment. Perhaps he belonged to the Anti-feather League. After a few months my patience broke down. If it had not, I should have probably gone mad.

Just to Oblige a Friend.

One day a neighbour came to see my birds, and he seemed quite taken with the Cockatoos. I think he was pleased with their noisy vulgar ways. For a few moments perhaps they were rather amusing, but anything palls after a time. They say that boys apprenticed to a pastry cook loathe tarts after a week of repletion. You may be sure I said all the pleasant things I could about these birds. I enlarged upon their rarity, their amusing ways, their comic attitudes, and the longer I talked the more eager I could see the desire for possession grew on the face of my visitor. At last he could contain himself no longer. Would I sell them? "Sell them," I said, "I could not think of it. We are old friends. Accept them as a free gift." I never saw anyone so overwhelmed with joy. Words could not express what he felt. I was too good. He hardly liked to take such a valuable present. I gently but firmly insisted that it must be as I said; and at last he yielded. After a lot of trouble, and bad language on the part of Solomon, I managed to secure them, put them into the carriage, and for just a mile I sat and listened to their yells with a holy and subdued joy. As the distance increased, the sounds grew fainter and fainter, and at last I once more knew the meaning of "Peace."

"Come Into the Garden, Maud."

Some weeks later, I went to see my friends, and asked how they were behaving. "Come and see," said the attendant sadly. He led me to a big out-door aviary. I gazed in awestruck wonder. I saw a roof with yawning gaps in it; strong boards reduced to match wood, and fir poles almost cut in halves. I said: "What have you been doing here?" "Why," he said, "it's those blessed Cockatoos you sent us," (he didn't say "blessed" though). I asked where was Solomon. "Oh," came the answer, "he has been out for a month flying about the garden, and t'other will soon be too. It's only a question of days." All of a sudden I heard an unearthly yell, like the killing of pigs, in the distant elm, and there was Solomon, sure enough thoroughly enjoying himself, and giving his views on men and things. And for ought I know he is there still, for I am certain that nothing will kill him but absolute violence, and should that be offered, I believe the verdict would be justifiable homicide.

A Fireside Reverie.

By W. N. MIDGLEY (Winslow).

The thoughts and aspirations of a lover of the Norwich Plainhead, with a clever imitation of a classic poem.

PULL down the blinds and light the gas! Outside the evening is setting in stormily. The wind howls round the house and the storm-wrack beats on the window. The fire burns cheerfully, and it is just a fireside evening! What more natural to the fancier than that, on such an evening as this, on one of the closing days of the 1912 season, he should, as he sits lazily by the fireside, lose himself in reverie, and that his reverie should run on the birds? Perhaps his thoughts go forward from present success to greater achievements, or (as may be often the case) they leap from present failure to future triumph. Hope! that needs to be the watchword of the fancier. In loss, in failure, in keen disappointment, he still looks forward and pictures himself the proud possessor of those cups and medals, and firsts and specials, that so far have been so temptingly beyond him!

What of the Type?

So in his mind's eye, perhaps, he is going over his stock. What type am I to breed to? When are we going to have something like uniformity with our judges? Am I to breed my Norwich short and thick and with nice tight feather and short flights and tails, or am I to breed them as long and coarse as I please, seeing only that I get the size and colour? What is to be done for 1913? Plenty has been accomplished in the way of considering standards and choosing models, but are the judges going to judge to them, and what am I to produce to be right? Well, I'll try and breed to the former idea anyway, and I must bethink me how it's going to be done. And so the mind busies itself mating up the various pairs to produce the "star" for 1913!

Colour? Oh, yes, I must have colour. But, stay; am I, as a fancier of the Norwich, getting along in the right order? Oughtn't I to have said quality first? Surely! Well, then, quality. What about that coarseness of feather in my stock that begins to be visible? I must get that right certainly, then ho! for a nice, tight, silky-feathered bird or two! Quality I must have!

Colour now? Well, I must get just as much of that as I can, too! I like it, and the judges swear by it. Again the mind runs on to see how much of the "ticked" and "variegated" blood one can make use of without overdoing it, and to see that one has enough "clears bred from clears" to keep the balance right. How am I to get Dame Nature to smile kindly on me? She's always up to her tricks! There's that pair which two season's back threw them all clear or lightly ticked, and this year threw them nearly all heavily variegated! That other pair, too, which in 1911 threw such nice typical birds, fit to win (that, indeed, did win) in good company, and last time produced nothing but "ten bob sellers" and scarcely that.

The Silver Lining to the Cloud.

Against this, to set off these disappointments, however, there's that little yellow hen you would willingly have sold for a shilling or two, that has brought you those nice typical youngsters! What are we to say of it all? How are we to coax Dame Nature—how learn her lessons as applied to our birds? So we sit trying to fathom the things she would teach us, so that by following on her lines we may be able to make sure of her aid in traversing the pathway to success. Can we try any experiment to help us probe her secrets still deeper? It's a thorny path that the experimentalist treads, but it is only by this rough way that knowledge can be deepened.

Then, perhaps naturally, the mind wanders off to the shows, and dwells on the points that have struck one during the season—that irritating neglect on the part of secretaries (in spite of the promise, or implied promise, in the schedule) to send off the catalogue to time. Surely a little more method would obviate this? Of course, I know it is very nice to run round and chat with this fancier and that, and to compare notes and birds; but, then, for every exhibitor present there are dozens absent, most of them anxious to know what their birds have done. When the morning's post is due on the second day of the show, out they run, only to find that that bothering secretary has disappointed them again!

Then there were those frantic appeals for help, when, in your good nature, you sent off an entry or two, or one or two beyond what you intended, just to assist a lame dog over a stile, only to find a day or two afterwards a note in the Fancy Press to the effect that "we have closed with a record entry of so-and-so." The result possibly has been that you have made up your mind to ignore such appeals for the future, be they ever so pathetic. Secretaries and committees would do well to bear in mind the story of the boy who cried "Wolf!"

Might they be condensed?

It seems to me, too, that shows are getting over numerous and that committees venture beyond their means and accommodation, with the result that the Fancy Press find fiascos to record. The fanciers in many of the larger towns, too, instead of combining for one really good venture, must split themselves into opposition camps, and each run their separate show—with the result probably that all are mediocre, with consequent loss and disappointment, or one is a success and the other a failure. By this kind of thing much jealousy and ill-feeling are engendered, which often run their unedifying course in the "papers" until the readers thereof begin to wonder whether there is really any good feeling and fraternity left among fanciers!

Against this we conjure up those shows that were patterns of promptitude and good management, also those "good offices" by unknown brother fanciers. It must have been the satisfaction engendered by the contemplation of these that caused me to cross over the thin borderland and "nap," for I found myself dreaming that I had produced the sensation of 1913—a perfect model—and I awoke with a start to the wife's: "Well, my dear man, whatever are you dozing there for? You may just as well go to bed."

An "Outrage" we can condone.

The recollection of my dream lingered, however, and caused me to "outrage" Longfellow in the following manner:—

Onaway! my best beloved!
I've been far away in dreamland!
Dozing by the winter fireside,
While without the storm has mutter'd!
I've been happy, very happy
'Midst the birds—tho' but in dreamland!
Spare thy wrath then, I entreat thee,
While my dream I do but utter!
For my heart has leapt within me,
As a man's when first and special,
Cheer his waiting hope in show time,
Come to crown his thought and planning,
Onaway! my heart as quickly
Beat when there I saw before me,
All my own, a perfect beauty
Of a Norwich, red as sunshine!
All my own, my birds' own breeding!
Not a fault—a perfect picture!
Clear and full, and just a model
Of the breeder's art and feeding!
All the breeders and the judges
Saw the bird and fell before it;
Saw its symmetry and beauty,
Voiced its praise from night till morning!
But, alas! my own beloved!
Rudely has my dream been shatter'd,
Just as when the birds come cardless
From the show one's hopes are batter'd!
For I wake, to find before me
All the cares and fears awaiting
Of the unknown coming season,
And my heart within me flutters!
Frowns the storm or smiles the sunshine
In the days when birds are breeding,
Sink our hopes or rise on pinions
In the pleasant Moon of Springtime!
May the hopes that, rising, calling,
Bear one up through changing seasons,
Bring to each a full fruition
In the Moon when leaves are falling!

My Early Days.

Told by an Exhibition Yorkshire Canary.

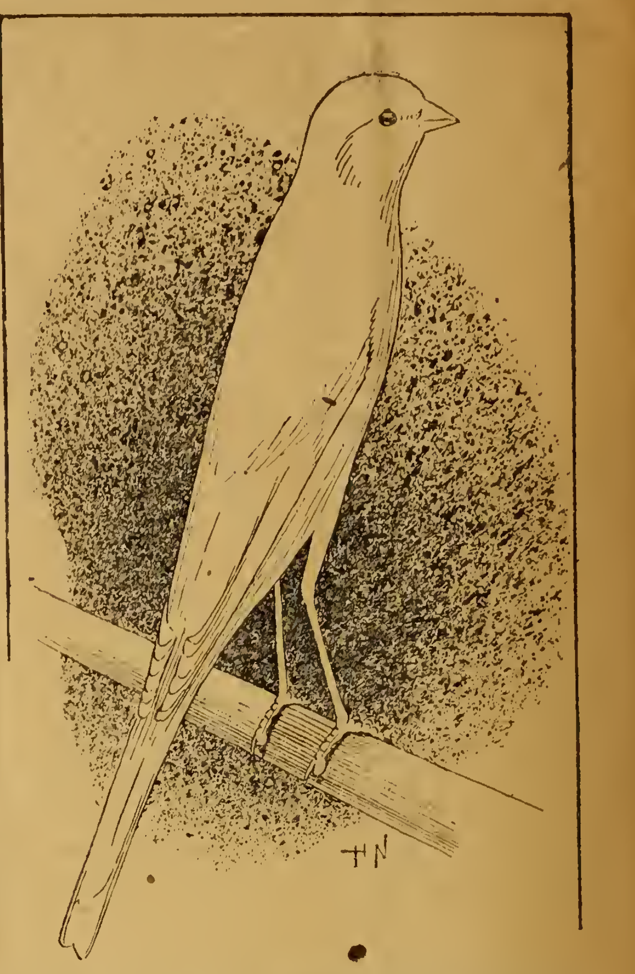
A contribution from the pen of Mr. R. Fielden Richards that may interest the younger generation and those who are not strictly "fanciers."

I HAVE often wondered how many of my owner's friends whilst gazing at me and echoing their thoughts in words, full of admiration, have realised the time and attention that have been bestowed upon me to bring about my present perfection. For I am long and slim, and stand like a soldier (on duty, mark you! not in the canteen) with nicely braced wings, and a sweet head. I'm a bit thin on neck, so I've heard critics say, but having seen quite a number of "first and special" cards hanging on my cage at shows all over the country, I put this down to jealousy.

I was born on the first of May in the year nineteen hundred and ten, and with two sisters and a brother, I emerged from my shell early one morning. The first few days of my existence are rather hazy, as you may suppose, and not until eight days must have passed did I begin to take stock of things. Mother was kept constantly dancing attendance, and luscious morsels of which I took my share make my mouth water even now. Meals! Meals!! Meals!!! No sooner had one been demolished than an aching void demanded another, and until mother nestled down on us as night drew near, sleep was only a secondary consideration.

A Fall out of Bed!

Our growth was very rapid, more especially that of my brother and myself, and at the end of a fortnight we were trying our wings and looking with longing eyes upon the perches that seemed to beckon us. One morning in a venturesome mood I struggled to the side of our bed and looked with curious eyes on the world around. What a vast place it seemed; made me feel quite giddy, and I was glad enough to scramble back again. That was a start, however, and after a few more "preliminary canters" I made a gallant effort, and succeeded in fluttering to the nearest perch and gripping it tightly with my claws. There I sat until a little of the strangeness had worn off, then ventured farther, tried my wings, let go of the perch and landed with a bump on the floor of our abode. Bed seemed miles away. If it had not been for a kindly hand (belonging to my master, I afterwards learned) I don't know what would have happened.



A STYLISH CLEAR YELLOW YORKSHIRE

The property of Mr. W. J. Heath, of Clapham Common, and winner of first prizes at Wimbledon and Wandsworth Shows.

This, my first adventure, taught me to be more careful, and soon I was able to go in and out without any attention, and my brother and sisters following the example set them were soon "on the sticks." And very happy we were, too, flying from perch to perch, or hopping about the floor in search of tit-bits. By following my mother's example we soon learned the use of the food trough. This helped mother considerably, and she soon lost the grave expression which it had been her wont to wear. It must have been a relief to her, after being constantly chased, to see her children helping themselves.

When Mother Disappeared.

One day an appalling thing happened. Even now, to think of it makes me shudder! The same hand that had so tenderly rescued me appeared and mother vanished. We kicked up a terrible fuss, but all to no purpose; she did not return, though we could hear her calling to us every now and then. Personally, I think it was hunger made me forget, and I was soon down helping myself to a liberal supply of food.

At this stage in my narrative I feel compelled to give my first impressions of the peculiar creature to whom we owed our daily bread. He was known to us at "IT." At first our conversations upon the subject ended in perplexity. "It" was something after the Yorkshire type, but with great long arms instead of wings, cloth covering his body instead of feathers, and a white face surmounted by a peculiar feather-like mop. Although at first startled when "it" approached, we soon began to look forward to "its" coming. Later we learnt from some older neighbours that this weird creature was known as "Man."

We continued to grow, and day by day our food seemed less rich, but having learned to crush little seeds, it was not long ere we were cracking the seeds known as canary and rape. We would be about six weeks old when our sisters were taken from us and placed in a much larger house, my brother and I finding ourselves with others of our sex in a similar structure. Soon the soft food, upon which we had been reared, was withdrawn altogether, and we found ourselves on hard seed, and with a liberal supply of water, which up to now had only been offered twice a day.

A Change of Colour.

Later, when we had grown much older, this soft food was returned, but prepared in a different way, and in appearance red. This I soon came to enjoy, and as the feathers began to come away with the first moult, they were replaced by far more brilliant ones, due, I have since learned, to the action of "pepper" on the blood. When the moult was completed I was caged by myself, and being a particularly good specimen of my type, soon made my bow to the public at a show. Of my first victory space prevents my speaking, but the full story of a later win of mine appeared in CAGE BIRDS some months ago under the title: "How I won the battle." To you who are not fanciers, I hope this little life story will appeal and make you fanciers. To you who are fanciers I need say little. Believe me, it gives us birds more pleasure than you imagine to be able to repay our master's kind and continual attention in some little measure, by winning for you on the show bench not only the praise of brother fanciers, but of the keen eyed judges, and perchance bringing into this sphere children more beautiful than ourselves to please your eyes. All that we ask is not to be looked upon as machines for the production of our like, but as "pals."

THE MASTER SINGER OF THE CANARY TRIBE

By
J. TOMLINSON.

How to keep the Roller Canary in health, to breed for pleasure and profit, and train for exhibition.

It is claimed that the Hollow Roll is the foundation of a bird's song. To any who is sceptical of this I would say, let him place before a fancier who is conversant with the Roller's song, a good Hollow Roll singer, and watch the expression expectant of other good tours to follow a good Hollow Roll! I do not wish to be misunderstood into saying that after a good Hollow Roll tours will follow of an equal value. Far from it; but my contention is that a bird that can sing a good hollow roll is capable of producing, and very, very often will produce other good tours.

More Good Tours Than One.

While admitting the beauty of the hollow roll, there are other tours and rolls, however, that are more pleasing to my ear—song passages, in fact, that will at once catch the beginner's ear—the deep bubbling water tour, the bell glucke, the water glucke, the water roll, and the last but not the least, the hollow bell. There is a laughing, joyful style in the sound of these tours and rolls that makes them very acceptable. That cry "monotony" was the means of the glucke and water tours being introduced again into the Rollers song, and in a way we have suffered for it. We have been on the likely track to lose the deep sounding tours and rolls which were once so greatly admired. Further, we have again introduced the faults which Seifert studied and laboured so hard to breed out. It is pleasing to note that many of our old Roller fanciers are true lovers of the old deep-toned bird, and are working hard to establish strains of the deep hollow roll and glucke type of singer.

Some few years ago complaints were raised about the size and poor colour of the Roller, and some discussion took place on the subject, but the Fancy would not entertain it, for to increase size and depth of colour means sacrificing the song tours. To improve the appearance, other varieties of the Canary would have to be used. At the first cross the offspring would be a larger, and a better coloured bird—but what of the song? Cross the offspring back again into the Roller—result, smaller in size, and a little poorer in colour. It may be asked, why not then pair youngsters from the second cross with those bred from the first cross? You would be using a preponderance of Roller blood, granted, but you would also be using foreign blood, and every time the latter is used the singing powers of your stock is bound to decrease in value from a Roller fancier's point of view.

When the Roller Fancier is Puzzled.

A matter which is a source of great trouble is the naming of the different tours, and every new entrant into the hobby is anxious to learn their names and everything worth knowing about them. An adequate description cannot be placed on paper; even the most eloquent language would leave some tour or roll of whose name the fancier would be doubtful. If the names of a few of the tours should be known, probably my poor attempt at describing them will lead to the names of one or more of the others becoming easier to recognise. I will commence with the hollow roll. It is sung with a closed beak, and a slight vibrating movement of the throat. A good tour is given in a deep mellow toned, rolling (or vibrating) voice; the consonant r, or er if a light toned bird, is heard more or less in the rolling delivery.

The hollow roll is sung in several different ways—the straight, the rising and falling, and the falling. The way that is most admired is the rising and falling, as it is usually known, yet I opine the correct term, for it would be falling and rising. The bird continues for a short time in one key; then gradually falling, barely a semitone, will sing again for a little while in that key; then slowly rises to the key on which it commenced, to continue its song for a short period. From the commencement to the finish of the roll there will not be a perceptible break in the song passage.

Another way I have heard it sung, and which seemed to have a very pretty effect, was for the bird to descend nearly a semitone, still continuing the tour, then descend again, and finish the roll on its second descent. There is no perceivable break in this style of delivery. It seems to be a passage that is full of possibilities. The straight hollow roll is delivered in one key from start to finish.

A Difficult Roll to Produce.

A similar roll to the hollow is the bass roll, but I would unhesitatingly say that it is a more difficult roll to produce. It is delivered with a closed beak. The movement of the throat is slightly more discernible than in the hollow. In tone it is deeper and fuller—more rounded as it were—and the deep rolling "urr" is plainly heard. It is sometimes sung in a light toned voice, but it is then of no value.

Another roll which may be termed a sister to the hollow roll, is the bell roll. It is an exact reproduction of the hollow, with this exception, it is pitched in a higher key. The difficulty of producing this roll lies in keeping it within bounds—I mean in not producing it in too high a key.

Previously I have been giving a description of the song passages that are known by the names of rolls, now I turn to one that is a tour, i.e., The Schockel. We do not see it classified as either belonging to the rolls or tours, but given its proper title it should be The Schockel tour. The difference between a roll and a tour is, that in the roll we find a mingling or rolling together of the vowels, or consonants, whichever the case may be, while in the tour we distinguish a distinct beat on the vowels, etc., each one separate from the one following. They may follow each other very quickly, still they do not intermingle, as in the case of the roll. Amongst other rolls and tours that have deteriorated these last few years, is the Schockel. It has suffered both in depth of tone and in the style of delivery. At present we hardly hear it in any other style than the straight delivery, or in other words, in the same key or tone. Formerly it was common to hear the hollow bent Schockel, as the rising and falling style of singing was called.

The nearest and best description of the Schockel, using the silent H, is: Hoo-Hoo-Hoo-Hoo-Hoo-Hoo-Hoo-Hoo, delivered in about 4-4 time, 8 quavers in a bar. It will be noticed that some birds will slightly open and close the beak as each note (or Hoo) is delivered. This is more discernible when a front view can be obtained of a light toned singer, but this movement of the beak is not an infallible guide to distinguish the Schockel, as in a deep toned bird it would not be noticeable. The movements of the throat in both the light and deep-toned singers is the same; it rises and falls, as each note, or Hoo, is delivered. As the knowledge of the song passages increases, it will be noticed that many birds when singing the Schockel will, on nearing the end of the tour, sing it a little slower, and then without a break in their song will go directly on to the flute notes.

Singing Classical Flute Notes.

To be classical, these should be produced in a deep mellow tone, sounding similar to a drawn out Du-Du-Du-Du-, in about 4-4 time, 4 quavers to a bar. Thus it will be seen that flute notes are sung much slower than the Schockel. The beak will also open (not wide, for the wider a bird opens the beak the poorer the quality of the flute notes), and gently close, as each note, or Du, is sung. The throat will be seen to slowly rise and fall with each note. It is an easy song passage for a bird to sing, and is regarded as a breathing, or resting point, in the song, before going on with the rest of the tours. It appears to be so easy to some birds that they cannot take time over it, but rush it through. Others will use a deal of voice power in producing it, and will raise the tone until the notes become, sharp, or nasal; others will bring the notes out so, De-De-De-De-Cho-Cho-Cho-Cho. The latter style of singing is often found in the light toned birds when they are in breeding condition, or after being allowed too liberal a diet.

Not to the Correct Pitch.

Another tour on which some strains of birds are apt to raise their voices is the bell tour. In a good tour the rising and falling movement of the throat is perceivable as in the delivery of the Schockel; in fact, a good bell tour may be classed as being like the Schockel, only it is delivered in a higher key. The difficulty in this tour is for the bird to keep it in the normal or proper tone. It is the least valued tour our Roller sings.

The hollow bell is a very pretty tour, and a distinct ulululululul is plainly heard throughout its delivery. There is a very distinct and rapid—full—rising and falling movement of the throat. The beak opens and closes quickly (in unison with the falling movement of the throat) as the ulululululul is sounded. The throat and beak movements are not quite the same in any other song passage, and seem to add a very pleasing appearance to the bird. To my mind they are so striking that when once the name of the tour has been learned, you will be able to point it out when a bird is singing it, even though the voice cannot be heard. I have often stood outside a bird dealer's shop window in a busy thoroughfare, and by watching the movements of a Roller's beak and throat I could "see" and name some of the tours the bird was singing. As the recruit gets more proficient, this will also come naturally (as it were) to him, as will also the naming of the song passages from their sound, without his being in a position to see the bird.

TWO CHARMING TANAGERS.

By A. H. C. LEGG (Porth).

The Sunflower is grown in various parts of the world, as a field crop more so than in any other way, and notably in Southern Russia and France. It seems to me a pity that the English farmer does not take this up, seeing the good market there is for sunflower seeds. After extracting the oil the residue can be made into cake for fattening cattle, and is equal to linseed cake. The oil extracted from sunflower seed is very sweet and agreeable to the taste, and is almost equal to olive oil; is, indeed, I am told, substituted for olive oil very often.

The flowers of the plant are very rich in nectar, and numbers of bees may be seen upon them. The leaves are excellent feeding stuff for cows, and the stems may be used for various purposes; when dry they make excellent fuel, and if you save the ash and throw this about your flower-beds, you will get beautiful blooms, as the ashes contain a very high percentage of potash.

Details of Culture.

Although the sunflower is really a native of tropical America, it is rather hardy, but the seed should not be sown before the last week in April, or the first week in May if the weather is not favourable. There are several varieties, but I advise growing only the very largest seed of the white variety, as the heads are larger and contain more seed than those of the striped and the black varieties.

The Best Kind for Us.

There are two kinds which stand out from all others, the giant and the dwarf, but the giant is the best for the bird fancier. It is a great "feeder," so if you want the best results, you must dig the ground rather deep, and give the ground a good dressing of well-rotted manure. Sow the seed one inch deep, and allow two feet between the rows, and thin the plants out to 18 inches in the rows. If you wish to sow only one row, then sow this on the sunny side of your garden.

If you have a hedge as a back-ground, the sunflowers will look simply grand.. They will often reach the height of from 5 to 8 feet, with flowers 8 to 12 inches in diameter. The "heads" are one mass of seed, and often as large as a dinner-plate. Always remember that sunflowers need a lot of water in very dry weather.

As Colour and Bloom Producers.

In the writer's opinion freshly gathered sunflower seed is a great colour-producer, especially so with the Hawfinch, Greenfinch, Goldfinch and Siskin. Too many should not be given to the two last-mentioned birds, as it has a tendency to make them too fat, and then you need to be prepared to give Epsom's salts rather often. For the Hawfinch and Greenfinch I cut a sunflower head into four and give to each one piece every day (or as they eat it up) with Spanish canary seed in the hoppers For the Goldfinch and Siskins I cut a head into eight pieces, and give one portion each day. Once a week give as much Epsom's salts as will lie on a sixpenny-piece in two tablespoonfuls of water. You will find your birds moult out a good colour and with a beautiful bloom.

How Modern Exhibition Crests and Crest-breds are Produced.

To accompany Mr. Norman's coloured plate given with this issue, those noted breeders and exhibitors, Messrs. Greenwood and Burson, of Swindon, have kindly supplied the appended account of how they mate their stock birds, rear the young, etc.

THE best possible way, in our experience, to breed winning Crest or Crest-breds is by pairing Crest and Plainhead together, as the pairing of two Crested birds together does not (from our experience) give very satisfactory results. The young from the, latter turn out very rough in feather, and the crest void of centre. But this mating is sometimes followed, and by it it may be possible to produce a good bird. By pairing two Plainheads together, however, you get very different results. Pairing back the young from two such birds with a bird of good crest formation will greatly improve your stock.

Methods of Pairing.

We find that nearly always the best birds are bred from a Crested cock and a Crest-bred hen. These hens, in nearly every case, will breed and feed much better than Crested hens. You do not want hens too large. We think a medium sized hen is much better than a large one. You must have type and quality from the hen, and size from the cock. Never despise a hen with a small head; very often it will carry more feather than it appears to do, of course, that is if she is well bred. Perhaps some of our large breeders would help the Fancy by giving their idea of how they breed their best birds, i.e., whether from Crested hens or Crest-bred hens. It would be very interesting to know. It very often happens that the best birds of the season are bred from a young pair of birds, but we prefer an over year hen, as we think that she produces much stronger birds.

There is plenty of material to-day for the young beginner in this fancy. They should get, say, two or three pairs to start with; and if they would buy at the end of the breeding season they would get birds much cheaper. Some don't like Crests as they say they have not much colour, but the buffs of to-day are a much better colour than those of a few years ago.

There is no need for young beginners to purchase the Lancashire for colour, as there are many fanciers of to-day who breed yellow Crests and Crest-breds. A lady fancier sold a yellow Crest at the last Palace show for £10, and as the Crested Canary Club are offering splendid prizes for yellows, there should be some good yellows seen out this year. If one intends to include the Lancashire, then Plainhead hens are the best to use. But it will take you two or three years to breed back again to the proper type.

There appears to be a great call to-day for the bird with long head feather, but a bird with good body feather will very often produce better young. Fanciers who have birds of this sort will do well to pair up to a hen with a good fronted crest, and we think they will be pleased with the result. Most breeders to-day are trying to breed birds finer in body feather. There is nothing better, or looks nicer, than a clear body dark Crest.

The Crest a "made" Bird.

It must be clearly understood that the Crest is a made bird, so if your stock does not turn out to your expectations the first year or two, don't be down-hearted. Keep the best and look well to the good and bad points, and well tend your birds. After the moult sell your surplus stock to pay for the seed bill. Many young fanciers give up after a year or two, just when their stock would begin to do them good, just because they have not bred a champion, or perhaps could not purchase just the bird they wanted. There is more honour, remember, in winning a third or fourth prize with a bird one breeds than to own a first prize winning bird you have bought.

As we said, the Crest is a made bird and all sorts of colours will turn up—dark crests, clear bodies, greys and evenly marked all in one nest sometimes. When you get an evenly balanced strain, one can almost tell what the parents will throw. After you have once paired up, don't change the bird about only in cases when you want to run a cock with two hens. Never, too, rush into your bird-room during breeding season, as you want to keep the birds as quiet as possible.

Management of the Breeding Pairs.

Many fanciers have started by this time, and if any words of ours help them, we shall feel pleased. Birds you are breeding with should have been under your notice, and should have been well fed up for the last month. No doubt some have had trouble with egg-binding, but if the hens had been given equal parts of linseed and niger seed, there would have been very little trouble in this respect. If a hen is seen a little thick at night, give two drops of glycerine on a half teaspoonful of egg food, and if a very bad case anoint the vent with a little sweet oil, to be applied with a feather, but don't handle a bird unless it is a very bad case.

Don't draw your cage slides until your birds are well attached to each other. We use the platform nest, and we believe hundreds of young would be saved every year if the platform was more widely used. Two feet six inches long, 18 inches high, and 11 inches wide makes a good cage, the nesting platform being 12 inches by 11 inches, while a wire slide goes under the platform, making a good nursery cage for the young birds. It is very awkward when the hen wants to go to nest again before the first young are out. They are very often pushed out on to the platform. In this case take the nest pan and the young, and put them in the nursery, under the platform. They will stay in the nest for days and do well.

Should She Pluck the Young.

Don't forget to put the hen in another nest pan and plenty of nesting material. If she attempts to pluck the young draw a piece of brown paper across the slide, allowing about three-quarters of an inch at the bottom for feeding purposes. Three or four handfuls of good rough pine sawdust will keep the young clean and warm. You must try to see all your young birds at least once a day, and if you find them not fed up at night you should watch the hen go off and then feed them by hand with damp egg-food. Feed with a tiny flat stick. This will only be necessary when the birds are young; they will do after four or five days. The birds should have two or even three clean nests. It should be changed for the last time when they are about nine days old; don't touch them after this, or you will not keep them in the nest.

How They Are Fed.

We feed our birds on egg and bread crumbs, and believe this will rear finer and stronger young than anything else. Boil the egg for twelve minutes, then put it into cold water at once. When the egg is cold press through a sieve with a knife, adding a good slice of two days' old bread, mix well together with a fork. Don't touch the egg-food with your hands. This quantity of bread with one egg will make enough for six pairs for one day. Watercress or young lettuce is the very best green food to use, but be careful during frost, as there is a large number of birds killed every year with inflammation.

As the staple food, give best canary, and a good supply of hemp and rape seeds. Give it to them whole. Let them crack it themselves, as if ground up will soon go bad. We should have said before, don't in any case push the hens off of the nest. A little green food will entice them off, if you drive your hens off the nest you will ruin them. If you find "sweating" hens give a pinch of Epsom salts in their drinking water. If possible change drinking water twice a day during hot weather.; It is always wise to boil the water in hot weather, as we think much disease comes from bad water.

A Novelty for Securing Nest Pans.
Sent by T. Southam, Honeybourne.

The sketches show a device to prevent nest pans toppling on one side, and also to prevent jarring when the hen goes on and off the nest. Get three strips of flat thin lead, three inches long, and quarter-inch wide, then get a wire holder as shown in A. Bend one end of each piece of lead around the wire as 1, 2, 3,; then place the nest pan into the holder, and bend the strips of lead over the top of nest pan and inside, as in B. This makes it very firm, and it may be taken off the nail for inspection without the least danger.

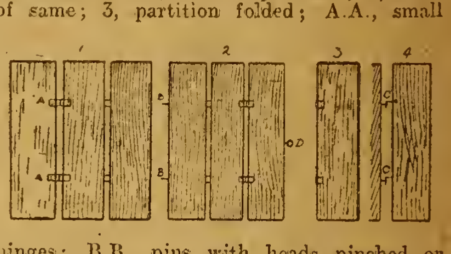
A Folding Movable Partition.
Sent by J. H. Barrett, 8, Borneo Street, Walsall.

Being short of breeding cages I have converted some of my flight cages into double breeders by the following simple method. The method of construction is easily seen from the sketches:—1, back of partition; 2, front of same; 3, partition folded; A.A., small hinges; B.B., pins with heads pinched or filed off to fix in back of cage; D., screw ring to fasten to cage front. If preferred partition may be attached to back by means of small hooks and staples as in Fig. 4. C.C., hooks and staples. The great advantage of this partition is that it can be fixed or removed without taking out the cage front. The width of the sections depends on the size of the door from corner to corner. If the width is 5ins. the folds must be slightly under.



Our Resident and Migratory British Birds.

The subject of my lecture to-night is "British Birds: Residential and Migratory." The term British Birds not only implies birds that breed here regularly, but birds that have at some time or other bred in this country, and would breed here again if permitted to do so. Many of our British birds have almost become extinct, such as the Golden Eagle, Cornish Chough, Waxwing, Bearded Tit, Crested Tit, Dartford Warbler, and Golden Oriole. Still amongst migratory species of these there are isolated pairs that make their way to this country from time to time, and no doubt would establish themselves as regular visiting birds if it were not for the mischievous gun, and those who use it. Of the residential species there are some that remain very near to their breeding quarters, except when forced to leave them in search of food.

There are others that are partially migratory—that is to say, they only migrate from north to south within the limits of our own country. I am not speaking of individual specimens, but of flocks as a whole. The different families of birds flock together at certain times of the year and scour the country in search of a particular kind of food upon which they are feeding at that time of the year. In many cases they return to their breeding quarters daily, and in other cases at the spring of the year. These are termed residential birds. There are other birds that breed in this country and remain here during a portion of the year only, migrating to foreign lands for the remaining portion; these are termed migratory birds.

A Controversial Subject.

There has always been much controversy on the subject of migration, and all sorts of reasons have been put forward as to why birds migrate. Some assert that those that leave us in the autumn cannot stand our winter climate; they say that the severe cold would kill them. I am not going to dogmatise in any sense of the word, but I have proved, to my own satisfaction, that the most delicate of these can stand a far greater amount of cold than they are credited with.

Nightingales and the Frost.

For instance, I have kept a Nightingale in an open garden aviary when the hoar frost has whitened the wires over until you could scarcely see the bird, and the thermometer has registered 10 degrees of frost. I have also started out on a ramble at 10 o'clock at night when it has been freezing hard, and Nightingales have been singing at their best.

I remember once trying to see how close I could get to one singing in a low bushy hedge, and as I went to mount the stile the top bar was a mass of ice. Then I tried to creep down the side of the hedge silently, but the grass was frozen hard and made quite a crumpling noise at every step I took, and stopped the bird from singing. I stood, however, for a short time very quiet, and it commenced singing again within half a yard from where I stood. This experience convinced me that a Nightingale could stand a large amount of cold; hence my experiment in the garden aviary. It is a noted fact also that the smallest and most delicate of British Softbills remain with us all the year round, namely, the Gold Crest, Fire Crest, and Long-tailed Tit, so that the theory of birds migrating to escape the cold weather falls to pieces.

After very careful study and consideration, I have come to the conclusion that where birds are gifted with special instincts and faculties for obtaining their food in winter they will remain with us in preference to facing the dangers and hardships they have to endure during their migration. Take, for instance, the Martins and the Swift. They live on winged insects, namely, gnats and flies. Nature has decreed that these birds shall obtain their food while on the wing; consequently they are provided with very powerful wings and very peculiar legs and feet, which would make it very difficult to obtain their food in any other way. The only time you can see a Martin or Swallow running about is when it is in search of mud to build its nest. On the other hand, the Gold Crest, Fire Crest, and Long-tailed Tit, can obtain their winter diet by using the feet and hopping from branch to branch.

The Early Chiff-chaff.

There are other Softbills that feed exactly the same, and have the same faculties as these latter species, namely, the Chiff Chaff, Willow Wren, and Wood Wren. All these birds feed on the smaller winged insects, but migrate as winter approaches. The Chiff Chaff, one of the first to make its appearance in the spring, often arrives here early in April, and you can see them up and down the branches of tall trees picking off various grubs and insects from the boughs while they are still bare, and anyone watching their movements would wonder what it was they keep on picking up as they hop from bough to bough. Now, it often happens that we have some very severe frosts after these birds arrive, which must put them to a severe test.

All have their Likes and Dislikes.

I consider that these birds have equally as good a chance of getting their living in the winter as the Gold Crest, Fire Crest, or Long-tailed Tit, but the migratory instinct is very pronounced in them, and away they go in preference to staying here.

British birds may be roughly divided into the insectivorous, the granivorous, and the carnivorous. Among the insectivorous birds are included all those birds that live on the various kinds of insects and their larvæ. Now, don't run away with the idea that they all eat the same kinds of insects. True, they will eat most kinds when forced to do so by hunger, but each variety or family of Softbills has a palate for different specialities.

The same theory follows in the granivorous birds. There is a very wide difference in the feeding of birds that live on various kinds of grain and wild seeds, and what is food for one kind would abolutely be refused by another; in fact, they would starve in preference to eating it. Take, for instance, the Goldfinch and Bullfinch. In the spring of the year the Bullfinch lives on the buds of damson trees, currant, apple and gooseberry—in fact, almost every kind of buds, as well as on the seeds of the ash and wild rose. No sooner are these exhausted than they take to the different kinds of bloom; in fact, the first nests of Bullfinches are almost entirely reared on the bloom of the privet hedge. As soon as that is too far advanced, and is turning to berries, they go on to the plantain, dock, and nettle seeds, then from these to the seeds of the blackberry. This gets them well through the autumn and winter. If you want to colour feed a Bullfinch there is no finer food to be obtained than blackberry and privet berries.

How three Favourites Feed.

The Goldfinch feeds on very different kinds of seeds altogether. Commencing in the spring on the seeds of dandelion, one of the earliest flowering plants, that carries him well into the sumer. He leaves that for the summer thistle, then on to the large boar thistle; from that to the seeds of the hard-heads, and thence to the willow.

Now you will easily perceive that while the Goldfinch is one of our most useful and harmless seed-eating birds, the Bullfinch, on the other hand, is most destructive, especially amongst fruit trees. Not only that, although both are granivorous birds, the food differs so widely that the natural food of the Gold finch would be useless to the Bullfinch, and vice-versa.

Again, the Linnet and Chaffinch are great consumers of a wild seed called charlock—a food that is refused by both Bullfinch and Goldfinch, so you will readily see that what is food for one kind of seed-eating bird is of no use to another kind.

By T. JOHNSON

A Fine Contribution, on a Matter of Vital Importance, that will Help You to Succeed in the Hobby.

HAVING disposed of the cages, I will say a few words on the different methods of pairing, and which in my opinion give the best results. I believe from what I can gather, that nearly all Roller breeders adopt the method of running one cock with two or more hens. Of course, the end all and be all of a Roller breeder is to get quantity; size and other fancy points being only secondary in importance. No doubt many arguments can be adduced in favour of that system of pairing as regards quantity, but it will take a lot to convince me that it is a better method than the one of running one cock with one hen.

One Wife or Two?

The Canary is naturally a monogamous animal, and although you frequently come across a cock bird that emulates Don Juan in so far that he can be transferred to each and every hen, while his condition holds out, you as frequently meet with one that will have nothing at all to do with a second hen. Another point worth considering is the help a cock gives to a hen when the single pairing method is adopted. I find that if a cock bird is allowed to help in the feeding, he alone—in 90 per cent. of cases—brings up the brood after the young have attained the age of 14 days. By that time the hen is already busy preparing her nest for a second clutch, and will be sitting before the young are doing for themselves, and I find by this method that one pair will bring up four nests of young in the same time that it takes a hen which brings up her young alone to rear three.

"But," you ask, "Doesn't it take too much out of a hen to lay four clutches of eggs?" In answer to that, I say that it doesn't do more harm to a hen to lay four clutches than it does to lay three with the addition of the heavy work entailed in bringing them up without help. As I mentioned previously, the cock does the lion's share of feeding when the young have reached the age of 14 days. For those, however, who prefer the method of one cock to two hens the three compartment cage is the best to adopt, with a hen in each end and the cock in the middle. Run him with the hen which you think the most forward, and when she has gone to nest, he may, after a couple of days rest, be run with the other. But, as I warned you, some cocks have so much affection, shall we call it, for the first hen that they will have nothing to do with another, except to beat her; and, as I have "had some," I shall always prefer the single pair system.

A. PROMISING MATING!

When the Birds Are Ready.

When you think the birds are ready for pairing, which is when you see the hen continually flapping her wings, and when on hearing the cock sing she will call to pair, draw the slide which separates them. Usually the cock will jump to the bottom of the cage, and start to pick up pieces of stick, and carry them about in his beak. You may be sure by that he means business. Give them a nest box, or pan, whichever you prefer, and some nesting material. I use dried grass, sphagnum moss, and pieces of hempen rope pulled fine, for lining. Give egg food three times a week until the hen is sitting.

A forward hen will usually lay about the seventh day; but don't be too impatient. It frequently happens that a fortnight elapses before an egg is laid. Take the eggs away as laid in the morning, and substitute dummies. On the evening of the third day, replace them, but see that she has a nice nest; if not, make one for her as neat as possible. Dust with Keating's powder, and separate the cock on the fourth or fifth night after the laying of the first egg, so that she is sitting nicely before he is separated.

While the hen is sitting, feed her on plain Canary, with the egg drawer always full of winter rape seed. I regard that as important, my reason being it prevents them getting too fat, or, otherwise, keeps them in condition. You may give a small—very small—piece of green meat about twice a week while she is sitting. The cock will do with treatment somewhat similar. He needs no egg food.

On the eighth day you may test the eggs to see if they are fertile, by holding them to a light between the finger and thumb. If they are fertile they will be black; if unfertile or addled, they will be light. If they happen to be unfertile, take them away, and give the hen a few days rest before returning the cock to her. Some fanciers advise letting the hen sit her time out; but if you do, when her young are due to hatch, she will have formed a pap in her crop in readiness for her young, and—although it doesn't always follow—she might go ill if she isn't allowed to perform her maternal duties.

If all goes well, and the eggs are fertile, you may expect young on the thirteenth day, but in the early season when the days are cold, it frequently happens that they don't hatch until the fourteenth or even the fifteenth day, so it is as well to wait a day or two before giving up hope. I forgot to mention though, that in dry weather, the eggs may be sprinkled with lukewarm water on the twelfth day, to soften the shell, while at the same time, a dusting of Keating's may again be given.

When the Young Are Hatched.

On the day before you think they will hatch, give a very little egg food prepared from an egg which has been boiled not less than 15 minutes, and a little crumbled stale home-made bread, in about equal parts. Use the yolk of egg only for the first three days. I haven't yet found anything that will beat the old fashioned egg and bread, but I have seen, and had an opportunity of trying a little, the yolk of egg recently put on the market by Liverine, Ltd., and I am intending this season to give it a trial. When the young are three days old, you may give a little green food, watercress is my choice, and both the yolk and white of the egg may be mixed in with the bread, in equal quantities, with a little sugar, and a teaspoonful of Angier's emulsion to one egg. Give also a little hemp seed, and a few groats, which must be increased in quantity as the youngsters grow.

I prepare my egg food by pushing the egg through a sieve of perforated zinc with a table knife, and rubbing the stale bread through my hands until I get the quantity required, afterwards mixing all together in a basin with a dessert spoon. Those with only a small stud of Canaries, and who may not be able to use the whole of the egg in a day, may use half the egg by cutting it across the middle with a knife, keeping the remaining half till next day in a saucer of oatmeal, the shell side uppermost, and of course, in a cool place.

Possess Yourself With Patience.

Don't interfere with the young more than is absolutely necessary; but if you do wish to see how they are getting on, wait until you see the hen off, then drive her into the other compartment and shut her off, so that she won't see you interfering. A good way of inducing her to come off is to give a small piece of green food and leave the room, then come in again in about a minute. You will probably find her off then.

At a week old, draw the slide, and let the cock help to feed, which he will do, especially if he has been allowed just a peep at them once or twice beforehand, or has been where he could watch the hen doing her duties. A young cock may be frightened of the youngsters for a few minutes, but he will, if left alone, invariably start feeding after he has seen the hen a time or two; then all is plain sailing.

As the youngsters grow, more food will be required, which should, if possible, be given three times a day, and when they reach the age of a fortnight the hemp seed may be given crushed, so that the birds eat it quicker and easier, but crush it every day, as it has the reputation of turning rancid in a very short time, although I haven't ever seen any real evidence to justify the conclusion; still, it is as well to be on the safe side. Give also hemp and summer rape soaked. The hemp begins to germinate very quickly and I find the birds like it; but change the water every day, as it soon smells. You may now ring the changes on green food, giving watercress, dandelion from the open, chickweed and lettuce; and also a mixture of the following seeds:—Teazle, inga, maw, rape (both kinds), and linseed and millet, in about equal proportions, say a teaspoonful a day. Don't be frightened of the groats.

How to Manage the Second Nest.

The hen will now be showing signs of going to nest again, when a fresh nesting receptacle may be given at the other end of cage. It sometimes happens that she will persist in building in the same nest as the youngsters. If so, remove them to the floor of the cage, and hang the new nest in the place of the old one. This usually has the desired effect. A sharp look out must be kept for the hen plucking the young. If she attempts this, remove them to the other side of the wire slide; but be sure that the parents can reach them to feed.

When the hen has laid her complement of eggs, the youngsters may be left to the care of the cock until they can do for themselves, which is generally at from 18 to 21 days; but be sure they are eating before they are separated. If you see one eating at the egg food, remove it to a clean cage, because they come on and thrive much faster when really doing for themselves. They are a bit gluttonous at this age, and if there is food they will see to it that they don't go hungry, while if they were left to the cock they would probably spend their time chasing him about for food. Cage off in a separate double breeder, and feed on egg food, crushed hemp, with milk-sop for the mid-day feed, and fresh water, if possible twice a day, to which has been added either two drops of tincture of gentian or tincture of quinine in two ounces of water. Milk-sop can be prepared by pouring boiling milk over a piece of stale bread each day, with a little sugar to taste, or as is mentioned in my article on "Inflammation," which appeared in CAGE BIRDS of January 18th, last, which please see.

The youngsters at this stage must be cleaned out every day, if at all possible, and fresh sawdust given. At five weeks, forward youngsters will be eating hard seed which has been previously provided for them in the hoppers, when the egg food may be gradually reduced, until at six weeks it reaches its minimum of a teaspoonful per bird per day until moulting time. At this age they may be removed to a flight cage, so as to allow them to use their wings and grow apace; but I should have mentioned that every day any promising youngsters should have been taught the use of the show cage by having one hung on the cage front and handled occasionally.

Should Green Food be Given?

Many breeders advise that green food should not be given after the young have left their parents, but, provided you don't overdo it, and the right kind is given, I am confident it doesn't do them harm, but good. A small spray of watercress, chickweed, shepherd's purse, or seedy groundsel, given fresh every day, is beneficial, but remove any stale pieces from the floor of the cage.

So far we have spoken of the treatment of the rearing of young birds, all going well, but unfortunately sometimes things go wrong. At about ten days or a fortnight old, a close observer may notice that the food is not going as fast as it might be, and in many cases may come to the conclusion that the hen has given up feeding. Sometimes I admit, the hen can be blamed, but not in every case. I have seen hens in these circumstances stand on the edge of the nest box, and continually chirp for the youngsters to be fed, and they have not accepted the invitation. On examination of the young, I have in such cases invariably found them to be suffering from some illness, as they have generally lost that nice peach colour so evident in a nest of healthy youngsters. I have tried all ways and means to effect a cure, but with indifferent results. In these cases the hen generally looks distressed, but whether she is really ill, or it is only her concern for the young, I can't say. As I mentioned previously, we have a lot to learn yet, and I have only mentioned this because I am sure, from my own observations, the hen is not always to blame when the youngsters are not reared successfully.

Useful Hints in Brief.

The foregoing directions will be sufficient to show the novice his way about through the breeding season, but I will mention a few after-thoughts that have occurred to me. If a hen has only one youngster, transfer it to another nest of about the same age; or, suppose one has five, you might transfer two of them to the nest that has only one.

Always try to get the hens down in groups of four or five, and if one lays a day before the others, keep her back a day before putting her to sit, so as to get them all hatching about the same time. The obvious reason is to be able to transfer any solitary youngster, or any that you find a hen is not doing well for. If you happen to have a newly hatched nest at the same time that you have a lot of older ones, and you want to give them yolk of egg only for three days, take a small slice of yolk when preparing your egg-food and mix separately. It is a saving. Use farm-yard eggs where possible. They contain more nutriment than those from poultry which are confined.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which me must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expirration of three days.

7. FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

A Hobby Worth Following

It would be difficult to find a hobby so entirely satisfactory to follow as that of keeping Canaries or British Cage Birds. It is to be commended for a host of good and sufficient reasons, but reasons unnecessary to detail here, because already readers recognize them.

But do all readers recognize the immense advantage they can secure by becoming possessed of "Canaries, Hybrids and British Birds?"

It means high-tide success to exhibitors; it means big profits to breeders; it means more pleasure to the man who keeps Canaries for the love of his hobby, because his birds will always be in the pink of condition, in tip-top health, and singers of quality.

CANARIES AND BRITISH BIRDS

By JOHN ROBSON, and other Leading Bird Specialists.
Edited by S. H. LEWER, of "The Feathered World."

Tells you all there is to know about Canaries and other Cage Birds. It is right up-to-date, and as will be seen by a glance at the selection of main topics given at the left of this advertisement, covers every requirement of the Canary keeper, from the moment of buying his first bird—in which he gets dependable advice and guidance—right through every department. You are told how to keep and train, to develop and bring out points, you are given multitudes of hints and instructions by old hands; just those secrets which have brought prizes, those things which, at little cost to the owner, send the value of the birds up to top-notch rates and yield big profits to the breeder.

Those who care to follow out the instructions given in this work in breeding, can always be sure they are doing the right thing, and doing it at least cost, so that when selling time comes they secure the handsomest margin of profit. They will find all help in treating ailments, will be told how to keep their birds in health, and will always feel proud of any specimens they offer for sale.

In this work there is a splendid range of illustrations. No fewer than twenty-six superb and life-like full page illustrations coloured in exact facsimile to nature in every respect. Added to this distinctive feature is a profusion of other illustrations, all of a helpful and interesting character. There are about 170 ILLUSTRATIONS IN TOTAL, including practical diagrams and plans, photographs of champions, pictures and drawings of different kinds of houses and apparatus; in short a practical and pleasurable picture-gallery of bird-life and bird requirements, such as no other work possesses. By themselves they form an education in the hobby.

To the man who breeds for prizes, this work is of proved value. Many men, previously novices, have followed implicitly the instructions here given, and have gained high exhibition honours. That is because the advice given is told in clear language, because it is advice based on expert experience, and because on all points the most show standards are given, with full information how to reach them. It is just the book for you.

STAGGERING PROOF

"Never been known to fail." I remarked in last week's advert. Read what a user has to say: Penny-st., Lancaster, April 21st, 1913.—Dear Sir,—Please find 2/6 for another tin of "Phosto." I am sorry to say the Goldfinch died the same day as Phosto arrived, but my Norwich cock is wonderful; he has filled a nest of eggs due to hatch Wednesday, 23rd. It has also worked a miracle amongst my other birds, and the hens are feeding grand.—Yours truly, H. Durston. Sold in tins, 1/-, 2/6, and 4/6: Judge Silk, The Norwich Specialist, Whitstable. (677)

NOT SINGING.

Wanted a trial. We are confident our Medicines will give you satisfaction. Special offer to all bird fanciers. If you have a cock bird that you are relying upon for the breeding season, that is not in full song, or has gone into the soft moult, or a hen that is dull and moping, and will not shape for breeding, we guarantee you a perfect cure. We have the grandest medicine ever introduced for bringing birds into breeding condition. Ditchfield's Tonic Drops are a guaranteed cure for loss of voice, soft moult, egg-binding, going light, feather-plucking, diarrhœa, and for dull and moping birds. In 7d. and 1/1 (treble size) bottles. Special size, 2/-. This medicine is undoubtedly the finest pick-me-up ever offered for birds that are run down or gone off song. Fanciers note: If our medicines fail to do as advertised, we guarantee to return full money. For bronchitis, wheezing, and hoarseness, get Ditchfield's Special Lung Tonic. Also in 7d. and 1/1 bottles. The safest and most reliable medicine ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. As an advertisement we will send a 7d. bottle of each of the above medicines for 1/-, or two 1/1 bottles for 1/9. All post paid, per return, at our risk. Two valuable seed recipes: How to Feed Linnets and Rollers for Contest Singing, given free to all purchasers of our medicines.—Frank Ditchfield, Bird Specialist, Oldham.

Linnet Singing Challenge

I challenged the world like a hero, and deposited £5 and my challenge stood good for 14 days, and no one in England has covered my deposit. But Fred Allen, of Sheffield, makes an excuse; if I deposit a hundred pounds he will sing. I will deposit £100, provided he, F. Allen, will do the same. I am leaving my £5 down yet, to sing him from £10 to as much as he likes. I am also accepting his challenge to sing time singing; he says 3 minutes will suit him, very well, and I am sure it suits me. I am depositing another £5 to sing him from £10 to as much as he likes; also I will sing both matches in his own town, Sheffield, before he leaves. If he had to challenge England with his Linnet he would find hundreds would want to sing him, so readers of "C.B." will see I am a trier, and no swank on my part. I do not want any more paper talk, either cover my deposit for both matches, or shut up: Harry Allen, The Original Linnet King, City Aviaries, 40, Beckett-st., Leeds. (Q)

FRED ALLEN WINS AGAIN

I have now put five challengers in the shade, thereby giving conclusive proof that I [illegible] the British Bird champion and owner of the [illegible]pion Linnet of England. I have just a few g[illegible] ones to dispose of, all taught under my wonder[illegible] bird; price 2/6, 3/6, 4/6 each; these birds can run like German Rollers, and will sing anywhere; contest cages, 1/1 extra. Thanking you all for patronage: Fred Allen, British Bird Champion, 548, Queen's-rd., Sheffield. (679) solved. For full proofs send postcard at once for my large book, "Parrot Prattle." This is the most wonderful book ever offered free of all charge to all Parrot fanciers. (This "Parrot Prattle" is registered copyright, and all infringers and imitators will be proceeded against). It contains hundreds of testimonials from all parts with full names and addresses, many interesting facts, and gives valuable advice and hints to all Parrot buyers. Full details of our original system of selling Parrots on four weeks' trial, at our risk, which we were the first to introduce. We sell Parrots of all descriptions on four weeks' trial, at our risk, before settlement. Cheapest and best in the Kingdom, and any Parrot sold by us and not giving full satisfaction, will be exchanged any time within twelve months. Remember we lead and others try to follow. Write to other dealers as well as us, and judge for yourselves. Lists of Parrots for sale and above book post free on receipt of postcard. Telephone No. 40 Morecambe.

The Black Redstart: A Charming Winter Migrant

Release of 400 Songbirds.

In the Luxembourg Gardens, on April 23, two men opened several cages and liberated 400 Thrushes, Nightingales, Robins, Bullfinches, etc., which perched in the surrounding trees. The men were detectives, and the birds had been illegally netted near Paris.

How Blackbirds Increase.

Blackbirds are particularly prolific breeders. In ordinary seasons they commence to nest in the month of March, and will continue breeding all through the summer months. The writer has found a clutch of fresh eggs in August, in an old ash stump in a hedge, bordering a field of corn which was being harvested.

No. 622.

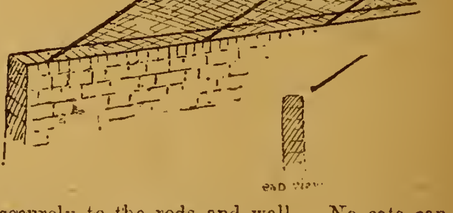
Get a number of iron rods, a little thicker than ordinary stair-rods, and fix them at distances of 10ft. or so along the top of the walls with an inclination into the garden of 45deg. When they have been placed in position, stretch along them a roll of wire netting about 2ft. 6in. or 3ft. wide, bind it securely to the rods and wall. No cats can enter a garden so protected, for these animals never make a direct jump down from a height (as an honest dog would do); and owing to the inward slope of the wire, they can find no foothold.



No. 623.

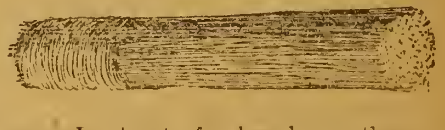
Sent by J. J. Taylor, 19, Aden Road, Ilford.

Herewith is a sketch of a "brush" or "besom," which I make myself, and find it very useful for cleaning out the corners of my cages or anything else used in the bird room. I cut out of a bass broom three or four of the separate lots of fibre, place them together so that the ends are level, then tie up tightly at the one end with strong string or twine, and the thing is ready for use. (Twine about one-third along).



The Hedge-Sparrow's Home.

In the south the Hedge-sparrow is an early breeder. She is a splendid architect, and not at all particular as to the materials employed. Usually the nest is composed of slender twigs, fine roots, dead grass, moss, and hair, and, occasionally, a few feathers, but nests have been found of all moss with a lining of hair, also one of moss and sheep's wool, a particularly snug abode.

NOTES BY THE SECRETARY.

More Hysterics.

BIRD TORTURE.

It is a curious thing that no society in England seems able or willing to take up the cudgels on behalf of our British song-birds. The amount of torture inflicted upon Linnets, Chaffinches, Goldfinches, and the like by so-called sportsmen of the building and kindred trades is almost incredible. These men net the wild birds in large numbers by means of a bird lime and a miserable decoy—termed a "brace-bird," which is attached by the leg to the end of a line, and is jerked up and down to attract its kind until the poor thing is wellnigh dead with exhaustion. . . . . . The hen birds are usually disposed of for a few pence, or kept for use as brace-birds; but a higher value is placed upon the male bird, and various cruelties are inflicted upon it in order to induce song. The owner will sometimes go so far as to rob the bird of its sight, under the vain delusion that a blind bird sings the greater number of changes. When its breaking-in is completed the poor creature is taken to a crowded tap-room, where the curious diversion, termed a "bird match," draws great numbers of these worthy sportsmen to witness the contest. . . . . . The vile brutes who own the birds usually win or lose bets of so many pots of beer over the matches, although in some cases I have known the publican to offer a silver cup for competition. The proud owner of a good match bird is a past master in the art of helping a bird through the moulting process. On the first signs of shedding its feathers, the bird is given strong saffron water; its cage is tied up in a black handkerchief, and more often than not the bird is placed in a dark cupboard until the end of its moult. The wonder of it is that these birds survive such cruelty. Here, then, is work for our law makers, who should strengthen the Wild Birds Protection Acts, and prohibit the catching and caging of our song-birds.—William F. Spalding.

A Field for Investigation.

What singing matches have to do with agricultural economy is difficult to understand. One would think that the wide question of whether wild birds are or are not an unmixed blessing to agriculturists and fruit growers would afford sufficient scope for the investigations of such a paper as the "Agricultural Economist." This question has exercised the minds of enquirers for generations, and many are the arguments which have been put forward on the one side or the other. It is as far away from a satisfactory solution as it ever was. The general conclusion seems to me to be that very many birds are a nuisance to agriculturists at one time or the other during the year, and that some of them are at other seasons beneficial in that they destroy noxious insects or subsist partially on the seeds of weeds. Moreover, there can be no manner of doubt whatever that if it were not the fact that the annual mortality among the smaller birds reaches a rate of 80 or 90 per cent. from "natural" causes, an organised war of extermination would become necessary in a very few years.

Misstatements and Fallacies.

It is, however, not with the economics of agriculture with which I have here to deal, but the preposterous misstatements made by Mr. W. F. Spalding, and published by the editor of the "Agricultural Economist."

The very first sentence is a misstatement, "No society in England," etc. Has Mr. Spalding never heard of the R.S.P.C.A., whose officers are ever on the look-out for cruelty in any form, these officers, as we have been again and again able to show, very frequently allowing their zeal to get the better of their discretion, with the result that their society has to pay the costs of the defence as well as their own? Does he not know that there is a society called the "Royal Society for the Protection of Birds" whose officers sometimes err in the same direction, and with the same results?

Bird-lime for Bird-netting!

"The amount of torture inflicted . . . . . is almost incredible. It is the amount of balderdash printed on the subject which is almost incredible, and one of the most incredible things connected with the matter is that in practically every case the writers of the absurd fulminations expose a crass ignorance which they seem to delight in exploiting. Mr. Spalding says that wild birds are netted in large numbers by means of bird lime and a brace bird tied by the leg. Fancy! Bird lime for netting birds, and brace birds tied by the leg!

"Various cruelties are inflicted in order to induce song." "Birds are sometimes robbed of their sight," and so on. If Mr. Spalding can name a single case of cruelty inflicted on a bird to induce song, or can adduce a single instance of a bird being blinded with such intention, I can promise him that CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE will see that no stone is left unturned to bring about the prosecution and punishment of the offender. I am glad to say, however, that he will have to go a very long way in his effort to find a blinded bird, and will have his journey for nothing. To say that birds are in these days blinded to improve their song is only to expose a gross ignorance, and to say that "various cruelties are inflicted," etc., is to publish a gross libel against a body of hard-working men, who take a delight in their singing birds, and tend them with the utmost care.

A Working Man's Hobby.

To call the owners of singing birds "vile brutes" is only to indulge in vulgar vituperation, and such epithets may be allowed to pass with the contempt they deserve. Mr. Spalding, like a great many of us, would probably see no pleasure in sitting in a taproom over a pint of beer and listening to a singing contest. But tastes differ, and the men who own contest birds take as much pride in the performances of their pets as a yacht owner in the speed of his white-winged vessel. And if they take this pleasure, are they not entitled to enjoy their leisure as seems best to them, so long as cruelty is not involved?

The great majority of the bird fanciers against whom Mr. Spalding is especially inveighing are men to whom pence are as pounds. They cannot afford yachts, racehorses, hunters, greyhounds, and other such things, but are they to be denied such sport as is within their means? Certainly so, if cruelty be incidental to their hobby, and the same should be said of horseracing, foxhunting, coursing, staghunting, etc.; no more and no less.

The working men who own singing birds are, most of them at least, possessed of a vote, and it is for them to see, when the time comes, that they do not vote for the cranks who would "prohibit the catching and caging of wild birds," as piously hoped by Mr. William F. Spalding.

Our Shopkeepers' Certificates.

All those bird-shop keepers whose premises and methods have been open to the inspection of an accredited representative of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, and in respect of which inspection a favourable report has been received, are now in possession of a certificate to the effect that their business of bird-dealing has been carried on during the past six months to the satisfaction of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE. It is a most gratifying fact that in no single case has an adverse report been sent by the League members who made surprise calls from time to time upon the shopkeepers concerned. This in itself is quite a satisfactory answer to the statements of those who have described bird shops as being "infernos of agony," and I hope that bird-dealers throughout the land will see that they become possessed of one of these certificates. There is no charge for these. If a bird-shop keeper will notify me that he is willing to accept visits at any time during six months from a member of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, who will report to me the results of his observation, a certificate will be sent at the end of the period if the report is satisfactory.

TERMS OF MEMBERSHIP.

PATRONS.—A donation of not less than Ten Guineas in one amount, or an annual subscription of not less than Two Guineas, shall constitute the donor or subscriber a Patron.

VICE PRESIDENTS.—An annual subscription of not less than Half-a-Guinea shall constitute the subscriber a Vice President.

HONORARY LIFE MEMBERS.—The payment to CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE of a legacy of £20 and upwards shall constitute the administrator or executor making the payment an Honorary Life Member. A form of bequest will be sent, post free, on application.

154, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

How to become an Associate.

Many readers of CAGE BIRDS have written to say that they would like to join CAGE BIRDS' LEAGUE, but cannot afford the subscription. To meet their wishes we have decided to form, in connection with the LEAGUE, a body of Associates. All we ask of these Associates is that they will promise to give every possible attention to the wants of their birds. And they must induce others to see that their birds are kept happy and contented.

All that the intending Associate has to do is to sign the coupon herewith, get five of his or her friends to sign each a similar coupon, and send the six, together with a penny stamp, to the Secretary of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, who will forward by return an enamelled Button Badge of the LEAGUE. There will be no other charge. NOW, THEN, BIRD LOVERS!—USE YOUR BEST EFFORTS IN THIS SPLENDID CAUSE.

THE BIRD LOVER'S PLEDGE.

I hereby promise to take every care of my feathered pets and to induce others to do the same

The Young Naturalist.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given weekly for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution, one star the runners-up.

*A Jackdaw at School.

A Jackdaw followed some children to Piggot's School at Wargrave-on-Thames, and when lessons began tried to go inside. When a teacher attempted to catch it, the Jackdaw defiantly exclaimed: "Get out, get out." It remained in the playground until the children were let out.—Copied and sent by Ernest Storer (aged 9), 89, Havelock Street, Leicester.

A Kind Robin.

A very interesting instance of bird kindness comes from Lancashire. A rector's son and the gardener saw more than once a Robin feed another Robin whose beak had been injured, and was only a small stump; it could not pick up food, so its kind companion and friend helped it every day. We do not often hear of such kindness to an old bird, especially among Robins.—Copied and sent by Wm. Sharpe (age 10), Cora Linn, Union Street, Motherwell.

*Food Fetches Polly.

In our kitchen we have a young Parrot in a cage. One day we were cleaning out its cage, and accidentally the door was left open, and the bird escaped. The kitchen door was also open, and the bird flew out. We thought we should not see our Parrot again. Some time after we heard a flutter of wings in the sitting-room. To our surprise it was the Parrot, which had probably come back through the front door. Polly must have been hungry, and not being able to find food out of doors, came back to its home. This shows that birds can remember.—Fred Heath (age 14), Northfield, near Birmingham.

To Society Secretaries, Advertisers and Correspondents generally.

Will all correspondents, and secretaries and officials of societies in particular, please note that CAGE BIRDS now goes to press on Wednesday afternoon so that all matter for publication in our issue of the same week MUST reach us on TUESDAY TO BE CERTAIN OF INCLUSION, or first post Wednesday at latest.

It would much facilitate our work if Secretaries and others would kindly write out their club reports, notices, etc., in the style in which they see them printed. Write on ONE SIDE ONLY of each sheet of paper used.

BRANDON COLLIERY.

Linnet sing held at the Colliery Inn, April 26. Forty birds competed, and some very good singing was heard; most of the cracks of the county were present: 1, 2, Briggs and Bails; 3, Lynch; 4, Gibb Judge, Geo. Reed, Brandon; timekeeper, J. Walton; doorkeeper, H. Ball. After the contest Mrs. Burrell, the landlady, put all competitors and visitors down to a grand lunch, to which we all did ample justice. Afterwards the following ladies and gentlemen entertained with songs: Mr. Tom Robson, the Rag-time Comedian; A. Bailes, T. Cameron, R. Mills, F. Robinson, H. Ball, G. Reed, Wm. Fairliss, J. Christon, Miss M. Burrell, Miss B. Burrell; the latter also entertained at the piano, and a pleasant evening was spent by all.—Cameron and Fairless, Secs.

Twitterings.

Secretary C. Holley, Leinster O.S. (Dublin) writes that Mr. H. W. Battye has been engaged to judge their show in Dublin, Oct. 28 and 29.

Mr. J. W. Cheetham, sec. Smallbridge and Dis. C.B.S., writes that Mr. Schofield, Heywood will judge the first nest feather show of the society, June 14th.

The "Spring Number" seems like another "Birthday Number" in size and attractive items. CAGE BIRDS keeps ahead.—Dan McArthur (Edinburgh).

Please mention in "Twitterings," writes Mr. A. J. Notley, Sec. Hetton-le-Hole C.B.S., that we have fixed Nov. 22 for our annual show; secretaries please note to avoid clashing. Wishing CAGE BIRDS every success.

We hear that Mr. W. Reid, Sunderland, has been elected to judge the following shows: July 12, Houghton-le-Spring; July 19, Boldon Colliery; Oct. 25, Derwent Valley; Dec. 6, Stanley Victoria; Dec. 20, Annfield Plain.

An advertisement in our "Household" columns will no doubt interest fanciers' wives who are now busy spring cleaning. Mr. Tulloch, of Sunderland, has a speciality in Venetian blinds with a patent check action. He also renovates old blinds at moderate prices.

Many thanks for putting my yellow Lancashire Plainhead in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. W. Kay, Macclesfield. I was quite astonished when I saw him in your valuable paper. I never dreamed of seeing a bird of mine having such an honour. I wish your paper everlasting success.

Mr. H. W. Cook, hon. sec. Poplar C.B.S., writes that the country ramble will take place on Sunday next, May 4, to Laindon Hills, the same as last year. Tea will be taken at the Duke's Head Hotel, Laindon. Train 9.45 a.m. from Fenchurch Street. Fanciers and friends are welcome.

I am selling a very large number of rings through my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. A. C. Hughes, and I think our new numbered celluloid rings will be the most popular of all Canary rings. I am receiving letters from delighted customers by every post.

Secretary J. C. Charlton, Edinburgh and Dis. C.B.S., writes that the following judges have been engaged for the annual show, Nov. 29: Norwich and Crests, Mr. Jas. Winter (Edinburgh); Border Fancy and Scotch Fancy, Mr. Wm. McAdam (Lasswade); and British, Mules, and Foreign, Mr. John Sykes (Musselburgh).

Will you please announce in CAGE BIRDS (writes Mr. J. Griffiths, Bridge Street, Clay Cross, that I have been elected secretary of the Clay Cross C.B.S. All correspondence concerning same should be addressed to me. I would be pleased to communicate with anyone desirous of becoming a member, or they will be welcomed by all our members at our next meeting, May 7, at the Angel Hotel, High Street, Clay Cross.

We have just fixed up our judges for 1913 show, writes Mr. T. Arnott, Sec. Kirkcaldy C.B.S. For Scotch Fancies, Mr. J. Stenhouse, Kelty; Borders and British, Mr. J. W. Bruce, Coldstream; Norwich and Crests, Mr. Allan Chalmers, Kirkintilloch; Yorkshires, Mr. Robert Heggie, Glasgow. As we are making a speciality of the Yorks. section this year we appeal in and around Fifeshire to make this a record for Yorkshires in the North. We are on the main railway line between London and Aberdeen, all fast trains stop at Kirkcaldy, so that it is possible for many of our English brethren to exhibit with us. Mr. Heggie is a well-known specialist in this variety, both in Scotland and over the Border; we trust the Fancy will accord him a record entry.

To Society Secretaries, Advertisers and Correspondents generally.

Will all correspondents, and secretaries and officials of societies in particular, please note that CAGE BIRDS now goes to press on Wednesday afternoon so that all matter for publication in our issue of the same week MUST reach us on TUESDAY TO BE CERTAIN OF INCLUSION, or first post Wednesday at latest.

It would much facilitate our work if Secretaries and others would kindly write out their club reports, notices, etc., in the style in which they see them printed. Write on ONE SIDE ONLY of each sheet of paper used.

The wholesale agent of "Phosto" for the London district is Mr. F. Easterling (Battersea Park Road).

Mr. W. P. Barnes, Grantham, has been engaged for the fourth time to judge Wallsend and Mid-Tyne C.B.A. show, held Nov. 8.

Congratulations on the splendid Spring Number. It is one of your best, and that is saying something.—W. H. Hamlyn, Harrogate.

I am more than pleased with your spring number, which I am of opinion excels all others. Wishing CAGE BIRDS every success.—W. Dunlop, sen., Ballymoney.

An advertisement appeared for Mr. Lawton, of Bucknall, Staffs, last week under "Norwich," which should have been under "Yorkshires." Will those who replied to it please note.

The North Wales C.B.S., writes Mr. R. E. Griffith, hon. sec., has elected Mr. John Kershaw, late Llanrwst, to judge the twenty classes at the members' show, July 5. Hoping to hear from all who wish to join. Fee 1s.

My committee desire me to thank you for the splendid report you gave of our annual dinner, writes Mr. J. R. Meikle, sec., Scottish National C.B.S. I am glad to let you know that as well as being a notable gathering, it was a financial success.

OBITUARY.

I deeply regret, writes Mr. E. Gill, Skipton, to inform you of the death of Mrs. W. H. Beck, at the age of 37. Wife of one of our most esteemed members, she was a kind wife, and loving mother, and our sympathy and that of the Fancy generally will be extended to our brother in his great trouble, he being left with a family of eight, the youngest but five weeks old, and the oldest just started to work.

Mr. Hector Lindsay.

The first break through death since this club was formed two years ago, writes Mr. A. H. McLean, Sec., Vale of Leven C.B.S., occurred on April 24, when Mr. Hector Lindsay, 29 years of age, a keen and enthusiastic fancier, passed away after a short illness. He had been married only fourteen weeks, and much sympathy is felt for his young widow. He was buried on April 26. The Jamestown and Vale of Leven Prize Band, members of the local Masonic Lodge, brother tradesmen, and the Cage Bird Club were well represented.

I was very pleased to see the sketch of my yellow Yorkshire in CAGE BIRDS this week. Your artist has given a life-like picture of my bird. Please accept my best thanks for the honour you have done me, and I wish you and CAGE BIRDS every success.—W. J. Heath, (Clapham Common).

I have always valued CAGE BIRDS, as it has always been a great help in making me a fancier, also putting me on the road to success. I have also found it very valuable for advertising my birds. I have sold nearly 100 birds this season, and could have sold more if I had had them.—W. H. Phipps (Isleworth).

Kindly announce in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Cope, sec. Oldham C.B.A., that we are holding our annual ramble on Sunday next, May 4, to Broadbottoms and the surrounding districts. Train leaves Clegg St. Station at 9.30. Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to see a platform full of bird fanciers and their friends; all are welcome.

We have been successful, writes Mr. J. Napier, Sec. Colinton and Currie Parishes O.S., in securing the services of the following well-known judges to judge at our annual show, Nov. 1, in the Drill Hall, Juniper Green: Scotch Fancy, Mr. G. C. T. Hope (Edinburgh); Borders, Mr. W. Lambie (Whitburn); Norwich and Varieties, Mr. J. F. Dewar (Edinburgh).

Kindly inform the Fancy, writes Mr. J. Lane, that Mr. T. H. Inman, 43, Derby Rd., Thornbury, Bradford, has now taken over the duties of hon. sec. to the Yorks. and Lancs. British Bird and Mule Club (see report). Hoping that all intending members will send their names in at once; also that all Lancashire clubs wanting patronage will apply for same at once.

Societies desiring the patronage of the specialist clubs at their 1913 shows should apply as follows: National Green Marked Y.C.C., Mr. E. Clegg, Victoria School House, Dewsbury; Norwich Plainhead Club, Mr. F. Cunliffe, 19, Lark St., Burnley (closing date, May 10) National British Bird and Mule Club, Mr. J. P. Carr, 45, Overdale Rd., S. Ealing, W.; Southern Norwich P.C., Mr. F. S. Matthes, 34, Rotherhithe New Rd., S.E.; Northern Yorks C.C., Mr. R. Tindale, 141, Stanton St., Newcastle-on-Tyne; Cinnamon Marked Y.C.C., Mr. R. Garnett, 8, Leeds Rd., Windhill, Shipley; Open Norwich Plainhead Club, Mr. F. Rhodes, 32, Barlow St., Bradford (closing date May 10); Green C.A., F. Handley, 23, Coventry Rd., Wavertree, Liverpool; Yorks Counties Brit. B. and M.C., T. H. Inman, 43, Derby Rd., Thornbury, Bradford.

I have at last settled at 7, Cliftonville Parade, Margate, writes Mr. O. Millsum. Although crossing from Everberg, Belgium, at the end of January, I have only recently been able to definitely fix my future abode here. Needless to say, such a residential district as Cliftonville has many admirable attractions. I shall be glad if you will notify my many friends in the foreign bird hobby.

This week's Spring special issue of CAGE BIRDS, that ever popular weekly, is a gigantic magazine containing a wealth of interesting educational matter. Most practical and up-to-date articles are contributed by our leading experts and foremost fanciers of the day. In addition to the literary portion, there are many illustrations, and, last but not least, a superb coloured plate fit for any fanciers' gallery.—L. Shaw, in the "Dewsbury Reporter."

A Flying Start.

Among the most fortunate of South Country fanciers we have heard of to date must be reckoned Messrs. Easterling and Carson; these well-known Metropolitan lovers, of the Yorkshire Canary have already over forty youngsters.

Yorkshire C.C. Annual Meeting.

Mr. John Greaves, Sec., writes that the annual general meeting will be held on May 3, 6.30 p.m., at the Market Tavern, Godwin Street, Bradford, when a full attendance is desired, as several suggested alterations will come up for discussion. A hearty invitation is extended to those desirous of joining the Club.

Ring-Ouzel in London.

Writing on April 16 to the "Times," the Rev. Edward Hounslow says:—Yesterday I saw a Ring-Ouzel near the boundary ditch of Wormwood Scrubs. The foreneck white band was very clearly marked. I watched the bird at close quarters for about ten minutes, and it then flew away in the direction of Ealing.

Our Early Migrants.

One Sunday, writes Master Eric Shorney, aged 8½, Dringhouses, York, we were sitting in the porch near the front door and a little bird came into a tree and started calling. My father said it was the Chiff-chaff, and that it was a week earlier than he had ever heard it before. It was the 30th of March. Another little bird called the Willow Warbler has come since, and we shall be finding their nest on the ground in the garden, as we have done before.

Six Nests in Six Baskets.

A curiosity of nest-building has been discovered at one of Messrs. Chivers and Sons' farms near Cambridge. Within a short distance of the jam factory six fruit baskets were tied together and hung in a cart shed where a number of men are often at work. In every one of these baskets a bird has built its nest, and in two cases the nests have eggs. The builders include Blackbirds, Song Thrushes and Missel Thrushes, and as the baskets are being left alone it is hoped that each mother will hatch out her brood.

Spend Sixpence—Save Pounds.

I thank you very much for CAGE BIRDS 1913 ANNUAL. It is champion. Anyone in the Fancy, or who intends joining, must not be without one. The best thing anyone can do is to spend his first sixpence on this valuable book, and follow its advice. He will have pounds in his pocket instead of being pounds out. I may say it is the first ANNUAL I have bought (I only started the hobby last season) and I was very much surprised at its contents. I have had many a book through my hands dealing with birds, but never a better.—W. H. Cave (Horden Colliery).

Finding the Local Dealers.

Many of our readers who like to look about them before buying their stock, but who are in doubt as to where to go, should look up our list of "Nutshell" Agents, which has appeared almost weekly for some considerable time. (Note page 396 of this issue.) These agents are in most of the large towns, and a visit to their establishments will generally reveal a good selection of appliances, seeds, birds and the hundred-and-one things that make bird-keeping easy. Perhaps you are within easy reach of one of these dealers. Just pay him a visit when you have any money to spend.

Country Rambles.

The following rambles have been arranged: Liverpool Fanciers' Cycle Club, May 4, Wirrall Circular Tour, meet headquarters 2.0; Manchester and N. Counties O.S., May 4, round Pickmere, etc., conducted by Mr. W. J. Metcalfe, train leaves Central station 9.0 for Ashley and Moberley; Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S., May 11, to Hildenboro, from Woolwich Station; National Brit. B. and M.C., May 24, to Epping Forest; from Liverpool St.; morning party 9.36 train to Chingford, afternoon 1.33 train to Loughton; City and Suburban A.C.B. to Epping Forest with N.B.B. and M.C.; Oldham and Dis. C.B.A., May 4, to Broadbottoms, etc.; train from Clegg St., 9.30.

Wild-Bird Life.

Cuckoo's Ways.

While wandering over the hills, the soft far reaching note of the Cuckoo was heard for the first time this season by the writer of these notes. Summer is not with us until the Cuckoo "Has told his name to all the Hills." He is a mysterious bird, and his note has the merit of conjuring up sweet memories of the past, and bright hopeful thoughts of the future. The song came to us, borne upon the soft breeze of a perfect day, with glorious sunshine flooding hill and valley, and the wild birds "gone mad with joy," singing everywhere. After an interval, the song came nearer, and presently we had a complete view of the wandering minstrel as he flew across a wide stretch of common land, a small bird following him closely for more than half the distance. He settled in some tall trees quite close to us, and once again repeated his name. This time it was almost startling, so loud and clear did it sound; undoubtedly distance lends enchantment to the song. If close to the listener, it is not by any means the soft and mellow note it seems when faintly caught upon the summer breezes. One would not give the Cuckoo credit for much regularity in his movements, yet last season a bird came regularly to a position in a clump of trees on the edge of the downs, every afternoon, at about four o'clock. The writer was making a study from under the trees, and the bird was a constant visitor, but so loud and discordant was his note, heard so closely, that he had to be driven away, but in spite of this, he returned again the next day.

The Cuckoo: The "Voice of Spring."

The male Cuckoo is the first to arrive in this country in the spring. As regards numbers, the males are greatly in excess of the females, and one can frequently see two or three in attendance on one lady, in fact the writer has seen seven in a group, and by their actions he concluded that six of them were males. They appeared not to take the slightest notice of each other; they settled in a clump of trees, each in a separate one, and from time to time one would take wing and circle round the tree containing the bird that was thought to be a female. Up to the present time we have no authentic record of the number of eggs each female lays; every naturalist has his own theory.

A Four-legged Norwich.

On Sunday morning last (April 27) I was looking over the young birds I have, when I saw one on the bottom of the cage, writes Mr. E. Baker, the well-known Norwich Plainhead enthusiast, of Cowes. I thought it looked peculiar, and on taking it out of the cage. I found it had four legs! two normal legs and two further back (similar to a frog). It was almost dead, but I got it round and it is now nearly a week old and progressing all right. I will let you know later if it lives.

War on Rats and Mice.

The natural hatred of rats by mankind has existed from the earliest of times, and of late years eminent scientists have been called upon to find means for destroying these pests. This has now been successfully achieved by Dr. Danysz, of the Pasteur Institute, Paris. It was brought to the notice of this scientist that rats died in numbers in a certain department in France, and some of the rats were sent to the Pasteur Institute for examination, where it was found that they were all suffering from the same disease. Dr. Danysz took serum from the affected rats and gave it to others, who also died, and further research following on this result led to the discovery of "Danysz Virus" and its subsequent preparation in liquid form. Animals other than rats and mice were then fed on Danysz Virus, but as the latter proved perfectly harmless to them, it could be claimed that a genuine rat and mice exterminator that could be used with perfect safety had at last been found. Full particulars can be obtained by writing to the Sales Department of Danysz Virus, Ltd., 52, Leadenhall Street, E.C., who in addition to supplying the Virus for destroying rats and mice, also undertake the clearance of all kinds of beetles, etc., from infested areas, at an inclusive charge.

Some Topical Time and Labour Saving Tips.

MICE are dangerous animals in bird rooms, and they generally manage to find their way in, and particularly when an outside building is used. The chief attraction to them is undoubtedly the canary seed; they are so fond of it that no other seed has the same attraction, and as a bait there is nothing to compare with it. Although most fanciers know this, they do not use it as a bait for traps in the bird room; they think it is useless doing so, the seed being plentiful everywhere, but this is a mistake, for if a trap is properly baited and placed near the hole where the mice enter, the chances are the first animal out will go no further for a feed, but start at once on the first he comes to.

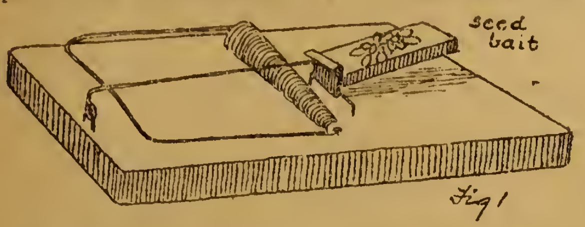

Fig 1

If one cannot find the exact place a mouse enters the room, one can generally give a shrewd guess as to his hiding place, and near this is the spot to put the trap, which should be always set, as one never knows when the little enemy will put in an appearance. In my own room I generally keep a couple of traps set, and what I use are the common break-back type with a flap for bait; Fig. 1. Upon this flap I smear a little butter or dripping, and drop some canary seed on to it, making sure that it sticks. I set it near the wall of the room and place an empty cage in front of it.

Small, but a great nuisance.

If a bird escapes from his cage during my absence, he is not likely to get injured, but before I proceed to catch him I push the cage against the trap, this springs it and makes all secure; then if the bird is difficult to catch and gets behind the cage, there is no harm done. There are forms of "ever-set" traps, but as I have had more success with the "break-backs" than any others, I still continue to use them. They should be set round aviaries with a piece of board leaning over them, for, if not protected, wild birds frequently come to grief in them, or the fittings of the trap may get damp and refuse to act.

As a rule, mice are a terrible nuisance in out-door aviaries, it is impossible to keep them out, and the only thing is to prevent them getting at the seed. I once saw an outside aviary that was built mice-proof by means of a sound brick wall and large sheets of glass in front of the wire upon the lower half, but such structures are not in everyone's power to erect.

Food, to be safe from mice, should be in the centre of the aviary, and even if suspended from the roof should have some form of guard upon the suspending cord to stop the nimble adventurers (Fig. 2). I have seen a mouse make his way up the walls, along the rough rafters, down the cord to the seed, and then when disturbed jump to the ground, but a guard, preferably made of tin, will prevent his getting beyond it.

If we prefer to have our seed upon a pedestal in the centre of the aviary, two inverted cones of tin fixed upon the upright would be effectual; Fig. 3. These would be painted, and would not look unsightly. Now that canary seed is higher in price than for many years, it is not out of place to give a form of seed-saving hopper (although it has been illustrated once before), that I use in my own room (Fig. 4). Fanciers who are handy with tools could make them themselves, or a dozen made by the regular appliance makers would only cost a few shillings, and soon save their cost in the lessened seed bill. When cock birds are in high condition they are constantly throwing the seed about, putting their heads in the middle of it and giving it a swish each way; the upright strips of tin marked A prevent it being thrown out.

Before setting a hen see that all egg drawers fit easily, and may be drawn in and out without any undue force being used; a sudden push or shaking of the cage may unsettle the hen, and it is necessary to keep her as quiet as possible.

The necessary extra one.

An extra egg-food receptacle is often required, especially when the young are a good size and there is a long interval between feeding them. If the doorway is not already occupied this is the best place to fix an extra one. Get one with a groove in it, as depicted at Fig. 5. Such a tray is easily removable when not required. The door shuts down on the groove and prevents it moving; they are certainly handy things to have about the room.

On a pinch, when going away for the day, I have used an empty sardine tin with a notch cut in it (Fig 5a). This was not one of my regular vessels, but simply used for the day, and then thrown away.

I have never found it necessary to paper down the cages to the same extent as some fanciers do for nervous sitting hens. If done in the corner where the nest is situated it gives them just sufficient seclusion to prevent them coming off every time one enters the room. Fig. 6 will explain my meaning. A weight on the top of the cage will keep it in place, with a piece of stamp paper at the edge where it laps over the end of the edge. If not secured in some way it is constantly flapping about every time one passes the cage in attending to the feeding, etc.

If hens are not humoured in this way, they are liable to be extra sensitive when the young ones arrive, and then possibly comes the trouble of parents refusing to feed, and we all know how heart-breaking this is, especially when we think we have something choice in the nest.

By T. JOHNSON.

ERRATA.—In my article published April 26th, I stated that young Canaries are generally able to do for themselves at the age of from 18 to 21 days; this should read at from 24 to 28 days. To the older hands the mistake will be obvious, but novices might be misled. How I accidentally came to give these figures I can't imagine.

In Case of Egg Binding.

After-pairing up, if in an outdoor bird-house, use artificial heat of some kind during the night, as it helps to obviate egg-binding. The days in April are usually warm and the nights bitterly cold, with sharp snaps of frost at morning time.

I have not been troubled much with egg-bound hens, but if you should see a hen all of a lump in the corner of the cage on the day on which you expected her to lay, you may reasonably suppose it to be a case of egg-binding. I should imagine the cause of egg-binding to be weakness on the part of the hen; therefore the obvious remedy is to give her something to give her strength, a stimulant of some kind. The best remedy is two drops of warm brandy or whiskey and water in the beak, and anoint her vent with olive oil, afterwards holding her over a jar of hot water that has a handkerchief tied over it to catch the egg if it is laid during the operation. After steaming the hen, replace her on the nest, when the egg will probably be laid in a short time. It sometimes happens that we hear of a remedy that has been obtained quite by accident. A fancier friend of the writer had a hen egg-bound, and the only thing he had in the house was some Indian brandy and some ipecacuanha wine. He gave her a drop of each in the beak, and it proved efficacious. Another fancier had a case this season; used the same remedy with like results; so, although a novel remedy, I give it for what it is worth.

Red Mite and How to Deal with Them.

Red mite are like the poor, always with us. I have read of a fancier (presumably a lady) who hadn't seen one for twenty years. At any rate, she hasn't missed much if she hasn't seen them. But this is what she does to avoid them. She washes her cages every day with disinfectant hot water, scrubs her perches every day, soaks nests in camphor, and wipes the wires with a wet cloth. All these in addition to having a specially made cage. Those are a nice lot of duties to be waiting for a fancier after a hard day's work. I don't know what the generality of fanciers would think about it, but I would give a lot to know what the birds think. I shouldn't imagine the breeding results to be enormous. I haven't used the camphor remedy, but it is one that is recommended by Mr. St. John, so is sure to be all right. I use paraffin and find it kills them all right, and it has one other quality, it is cheap. Paint all crevices with paraffin once a week, and you won't be troubled much with red mite.

Another thing that requires attention is to sift the seed and clean the hoppers at least once a week. I don't remember having seen it mentioned before, but if you will notice a hen that is sitting, she will always leave the seed husks in the hopper, and if they are not blown off once a day, she will probably waste much time hunting among the husks for seed when she comes off to feed. It is only a little thing, but it is worth paying attention to.

Always allow a free current of air through the room during hot weather. It is a factor towards success if you happen to have a room which gets a lot of sunshine.

Don't breed from more pairs of birds than you have room for and time to look after. Before pairing up, examine the toenails of all your birds, and if they are long cut them. In the heavy feathered varieties, your chances of fertile eggs are enhanced if you cut some of the feather from round the vent. When a hen is feeding young, if you notice her eating too much of one variety of food, to the exclusion of the other foods, limit that one so that she will be forced to partake of a mixture of them.

When the Bath is very helpful.

In my first instalment I advised the use of the bath at all times, and at no time is it more desirable than after the young have left their parents. Then is the time to train them to the use of it; and at no age are they so fond of it as at from four to twelve weeks old, rarely a day passing when they don't have a splash. Give it to them right through the moult. Nothing helps them to moult better, and to keep in perfect condition than plenty of bathing.

There is another matter worth attention, that is the keeping of all food troughs scrupulously clean when the hen is feeding young. A good plan is to have two sets of pots, one for each day; and use a cloth that has been soaked in a solution of Jeyes' Fluid to wipe out the pots at each successive feed. If there is any food left in a pot from the preceding feed, throw it away and give a fresh supply.

In breeding Hybrids from the hen Canary and the British Finch, the fancier must have an unlimited supply of that useful commodity, patience. He must be prepared to view the frequent occurrence, even a succession, of unfertile eggs, not to mention other disappointments, with the equanimity of Job. I have often thought that even Job's patience would have been tried had he ever attempted to breed Hybrids.

Why are so many eggs unfertile?

Why are so many eggs unfertile? There have been many opinions advanced, but the most popular theory seems to be the one that the union doesn't take owing to the structural differences between the two birds. Those who adhere to that theory are not lacking in evidence in support of their case, because they aver that they have seen copulation take place time after time with always the same result, clear eggs. My own opinion is, although I don't wish to dogmatize, that the copulation in these cases is more apparent than real. It is quite possible for a fancier who has more than a casual acquaintance with Hybridizing to be deceived when he witnesses copulation, and I am convinced from my own observations that the actions of the Finch are not always what they might be, but whether it is from want of condition or from shyness I would not like to say, probably the latter.

To those who doubt my theory, I would like to put to them a case in point. Suppose we have two Finches of one species, paired up to two Canary hens. One Finch is a reliable muler, by which I mean he has filled eggs before; the other is a house-moulted Finch that gives every promise of making a muler. Both birds are in good condition, and in each case copulation has been witnessed, yet when the eggs are tested, those from the reliable bird are fertile, while those from the new one are clear.

How are we to account for it? It can't be structural difference, because the conditions are the same in each case. It is a very interesting problem, but I pin my faith to the theory that in the case of the clear eggs copulation was more apparent than real, and that if the Finch is persevered with, and his timidity overcome, he will in time fill eggs with the best of them. Cases are forthcoming where Finches caught in breeding plumage have filled eggs at the first time of asking, but for the most part these are isolated cases. But as you cannot make bricks without straw, you cannot breed mules without Finches; and as it costs as much to keep an inferior specimen as a good one, my advice is to get the best in each species.

In making a start, it is cheaper to buy proved mulers, as they are advertised almost the year about; but when selecting fresh ones, get the biggest and the best coloured ones you possibly can. What is nicer than to have a good muler that is able to win prizes in the British classes when the shows come round. It makes up for a few disappointments you may have had in the breeding room. In Goldfinches, I prefer the Siberian because of the extra size in the progeny.

Questions and Answers.

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

*(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaints written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence, otherwise their letters will not receive attention. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Childrens' Fund (London).

(9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

SEED SAMPLE (Rex).—The sample sent is cole and not summer rape. The latter is a seed of about half the size, and the grains of a reddish-brown colour. The kind you sent makes a tolerably good substitute for rape when the latter cannot be obtained of good quality, and is useful to add to seed mixtures.

DESERTION (A. Snow).—The hen coming forward for nesting again would be the chief cause of the hen deserting the young, and they were too young for the cock to take charge of, and finish the task of bringing them up as he might have done had they been older. You have done quite right to remove the cock this time. Keep him out of sight of the hen, and it is not unlikely she may do better this time. Whilst sitting, give a diet of plain canary seed only, with just a scrap of egg food or crushed biscuit once a week. In the afternoon of the thirteenth day give a little egg food, and from this point feed the same as advised to "J. W. F." in last issue. Avoid interference with nest or young as much as possible.

NOT NESTING (J. T.).—The cause of the hen not settling down to nesting is sufficiently obvious from the dropping of feathers from time to time. She is clearly in nothing like breeding condition, and will not be fit to mate for some little time—probably not before the end of May at earliest. Consequently, if you could replace her with another healthy, robust hen in breeding condition, that would be the surest way of avoiding a blank season altogether, which is not unlikely if you rely upon this hen. The cock seems to be quite fit for mating at once. The treatment advised to "Novice E. T." in this issue is the best you can adopt for this hen. A fortnight's course may suffice, but continue it for a month if necessary.

CLAW TORN OUT (Seven Out).—In addition to the claw being torn out, I am much inclined to the opinion that the joint at the "ball of the foot" is dislocated. In this case unskilful interference will only cause the bird intense pain, and probably make matters far worse. Therefore, if the bird is valuable I would advise you to ask a veterinary to look at the foot, and manipulate the joint into its proper position if necessary. Otherwise you might try bathing it for a few minutes daily in a lukewarm solution of wych hazel—a teaspoonful of the extract in a saucerful of warm water. After bathing a few minutes, dry carefully, but do not attempt manipulation, and finally paint the whole foot with a small feather or camel-hair pencil dipped in tincture of arnica.

A LONG MOULT (Novice, E.T.).—I suspect it is your room and feeding; the latter is by no means good, which varies considerably from what the bird had been accustomed to, and this is more likely the cause of the protracted moult than the very temporary inconvenience of transit. Keep the bird in a bright and well-ventilated part of the room, out of direct cold draughts. Give a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape only as staple diet. In addition to this, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and finely sprinkled with maw seed, every second day. On the alternate days give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, and teazle, with just a sprinkling of mustard seed. Give two leaves of dandelion daily. Dissolve half a drachm of ammonio-citrate of iron and quinine in an ounce of sherry, add a teaspoonful of glycerine, and give twenty drops of this mixture in the drinking water two days in every three for a week, and every second day afterwards until feathers cease dropping. Continue this treatment, if necessary, for a month. It is possible the bird may be in good breeding condition in time to get at least one brood from him. As regards the fading colour, the bird would be colour-fed by its late owner at the previous moult. It is too late for you to attempt to restore the colour. Write again just before next moulting season about this.

SURPRISING (Extra Bad).—I agree with you, it does seem like "heaping on the agony" to have only two fertile eggs out of fourteen full clutches in the first round, after being, as you say, successful with first rounds for years. But this year—in my district at least—has been somewhat exceptional in the severity of dry east winds, which coincided almost exactly with the nesting of birds mated at the proper season, and as similar conditions seem to have prevailed with you, this is doubtless the sole cause of your loss. The experience is not likely to happen with the second round now there seems every prospect of the weather becoming mild and more settled. In any case, the precautions you are taking are the best possible, and about all you can do to prevent a recurrence of the trouble. Do not have more than one slow-burning fire each evening, and none when the weather is tolerable. Also once in two days would suffice to give egg food, with a little mixed seed on the alternating days, and a little fresh crisp young dandelion daily.

AN INTERRUPTED CYCLE (Deserter).—I should say the incubatory fever was cut short, and the cycle of reproduction ended with it. Such abortive efforts occur now and again, whether the cock is left with a hen or not, and I do not suppose it would have made the least difference had the cock been left with the hen in your case. Still, if the cock does not interfere with the nest you may try leaving him with her next time, as the hen will doubtless soon begin nesting again. Should the cock prove too mischievous to be allowed to remain, then see that he is placed out of sight, and ear-shot, if possible, when he is removed. Your theory that she would be nervous at hearing the young is scarcely a sound one, as in a normal cycle of reproduction the first movements or sound of the young in the shells would merely have attached her more closely to the nest, and brought about the desire to feed the young when they at last appeared. By the bye, had you been interfering with the nest or eggs? If so, it is quite possible the desertion was her way of showing resentment of the intrusion. Your method of feeding was correct.

SUFFERS FROM IDLENESS (A. G. C.).—The bird is probably in an overfed condition. For the next three weeks give a staple diet of plain canary only, with a liberal supply of green food—dandelion, chickweed, or flowering heads of groundsel—daily. Allow only a teaspoonful of seed per day, and twice each week reduce this by one-half, and add a half-teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts rape, millet, niger, teazle, and linseed. Keep cage floor strewn with clean gritty sand, and stick a small cube of hard common salt in the wires for him to peck at. Add to the drinking water as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and ten drops of lemon juice every second day for a week. In the next week add twenty drops of Chemical Food every second day. In the third week repeat the dosage of the first week, and then, in the fourth week, add to the water every second day four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid. From the end of the third week commence to feed the bird as frequently advised here for preparing birds for mating. Gentian and steel, by the way, I have not advised to be kept in stock as a mixture. They should be kept separately, and added to the water separately when required. Still, the statement about making ink is just a wee bit strained. At any rate, I fear our printers would not bless the MSS written therewith.

ROLLER ALIAS ANYTHING (J.R.C.).—(1) No; Glucke, St. Audreasburg, Seifert, and Hartz Rollers are not different species of Canaries. The terms are purely fancy names, which arose in the first place as a result of trade competition. At the best, a few of the terms indicate the type of song. You would find the question dealt with in Part 16 of "Our Canaries." (See also Mr. Tomlinson's article beginning in a recent issue.—Ed.) (2) To name them in order of merit as singers, if you mean for exhibition, as contest singers, I should place them thus: Glucke, Seifert, St. Andreasburg. The Hartz would be out of the running altogether, and the St. Audreasburg of only ordinary ability, of not very great service. If you want them classified as popular household songsters, I should place them thus: St. Andreasburg, Seifert, Glucke, and Hartz. The Hartz Roller of the trade you should know is practically an untrained German Canary, which, given proper tuition from a sufficiently early age, might have grown up into a Roller with some fancy adjective tacked on.

VOCAL POWER OF ROLLER (Amateur).—Candidly, I do not know whether the Roller Canary can be taught to sing the full song of the British Nightingale. I have never known or heard of such a phenomenon, and whilst recognising the risk of denying the possibility of anything in these times, I do most certainly consider it in the highest degree improbable. A fair price for such a Roller, assuming you had or could train one, would be just what you could get for it, and the price would, of course, depend upon the demand that existed for it, and the impression its rendition of "sweet Philomel's" performance made upon its hearers. Perhaps you are thinking of the glowing descriptions of the Roller's song which you see in some advertisements, which frequently claim "the Nightingale's song" or "Nightingale notes" as part of the bird's performance. If this is so, you must not imagine that these birds sing anything at all approaching a material portion of the Nightingale's song. As a rule it simply means that they introduce into their song a few stray notes which resemble notes in the song of the Nightingale, and nearly always it is the typical "jug-jug-jug-jug" which is such a feature of the latter bird. From the similarity of the note I should imagine a Roller strong in Glucke rolls about the nearest approach to the Nightingale's song you could hope to get.

NOT SITTING (Worried, Hereford).—Your question about a mouse getting into cage may partly explain your trouble. Certainly if these pests find their way into the cage they may upset the hen and prevent her settling down to sit, and even if she ignored them and performed her duties satisfactorily you cannot expect to meet with much success under such conditions. You must, therefore, find some means of eradicating these pests, or at least keeping them out of the cage. Mice, however, would not account for the building and laying of the hen, both of which features show abnormal prolificacy, and it is probable this cycle of reproduction will not be completed. You have done quite right to give her the eggs. Beyond attending to the rodents this is all you can do this time. If she still refuses to settle down in say three or four days, your best course is to look out for a foster hen or hens to transfer the eggs to. If this is not possible, as a sort of heroic course remove the cage to a place where it is quite safe from nightly visits by mice, and see if that will encourage her to settle down. If this plan fails, remove nest and eggs and let the birds start all over again, and in the meantime clear out the mice. Remember, this is essential. If the hen is a young one, I think it most probable, when given a better chance, free from disturbance, she will go through all right next time. Do not give more material next time than will suffice to make a reasonably good and substantial nest, and leave the hen's arrangements alone as much as possible.

CHILLED EGGS (J. Booth).—Yes, decidedly, I advise you to allow the hen to sit her full time on the eggs which were exposed for two hours and allowed to get cold after the hen had sat on them for two or three days. If the hen had been sitting closely the first day or two the germs would certainly have made some progress; but, even so, it is quite possible for development to be arrested for this brief period without very serious results. It is always best to give temporarily chilled eggs the full benefit of the doubt. By doing so, many agreeable surprises may be experienced.

VARIED (Goldie).—(1) If you attempt breeding with a cock and two hens in a single large breeding cage, there would most likely be ructions, and I cannot promise you much prospect of success. You do not say exactly what kind of cage it is, nor mention the size, so I cannot very well advise you as to best way of getting the cock in and out without disturbing the hens. I can only suggest that you allow him to remain with hens permanently, if he does not interfere with the nests; otherwise, when both hens have laid their clutches remove him in the evening. Note exactly his position, shade cage deeply, and quietly pick him off the perch. As a rule, he should remain with each hen until the third egg is laid. (2) Yes, certainly a pair of Rollers will do well in a double-breeding cage the size you name. I should, however, prefer keeping these birds in the large single cage. Then you could keep the above two hens separately, one in each end of this cage, and run the cock with each hen one-half of each day until they had laid their clutches. Then remove him and cage him singly. You would simply have to open slide and run him from one compartment to the other at mid-day each day. (3) No, Seiferts are not noisy, loud singers, if properly trained. If badly trained, or not trained, they do not differ from any other loud, vulgar Roller. See reply to another querist re Roller names this week. (4) Next to Rollers the Border Fancy has about the best type of song of a similar character.

SLOW STARTERS OUTSIDE (H.S.).—The late cold winds have doubtless had much to do with your hens in the outdoor aviary not yet starting to nest. Considering the situation and the sort of weather we have had, your dietary might have been rather considerably augmented throughout April with every advantage. Make the following increases now, and with a little more patience they will probably "get a move on" before long. As a staple diet give unlimited canary and summer rape in different receptacles, to prevent waste. In addition, give each morning for a fortnight three teaspoonfuls of egg-food with one teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame mixed in it, and each afternoon give three teaspoonfuls of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and chopped sunflower seeds. Each morning give a fresh-growing "stool" of dandelion, split across the crown so that birds can nibble at the "meaty" root as well as clearing off the leaves. A dozen fair-sized leaves on a "stool" will be none too much, or give two smaller "stools." If the supply fails, give an equivalent quantity of chickweed. After the first fortnight, if the birds are getting forward towards nesting, go on giving the egg-food as above every second day, and the mixed seeds on the alternating days, instead of giving both each day. Otherwise continue the same dietary as above until the hens go to nest.

THE PUTATIVE FATHER (J. E. L.).—It is a decidedly interesting problem, but, unfortunately, one scarcely possible of absolute proof. The most that can be looked for is circumstantial proof, such, for example, as might occur had the two males been of such a character as to produce decidedly different types of young from the hen in question, when the type of the young might afford a clue to the actual parentage. Beyond this, theory and conjecture, without better proof than personal opinion, is all that can be expected. You do not say whether copulation took place freely with the first cock during the latter part of his stormy reign. If copulation took place at all, it is quite possible for him to have fertilised any, or all, of the four eggs. At the same time, it is quite possible for the second cock to have fertilised some of the subsequent eggs. My opinion, taking into consideration the evident lack of compatibility, is that the first cock fertilised the first egg of the clutch only, and the second cock the remaining three. The problem is so interesting that I am asking our Editor to give it a place in the correspondence pages, and trust some of our scientific readers will thrash out the question.

WILL THEY SUCCEED? (Outdoor Aviary).—There is no reason whatever why a trio of Yorkshires—cock and two hens—should not breed quite successfully in your garden aviary, provided, of course, you have taken the precaution to select only birds that have been bred and kept hitherto under normal conditions of temperature. The disagreement between the hens may possibly be due to the choice of nesting sites. If you have put in nest pans of different types, or hung one materially higher than the rest, you should have put in at least four nesting sites, preferably all of the same pattern, and hung to equal height. The latter point alone, if neglected, practically always leads to much disagreement. It is impossible to forecast the marking of the young, without knowing how the parents were bred. If there is no taint of cinnamon blood in the cock or the ticked yellow hen, you may expect from these two, clears, ticks, and lightly variegated, yellows and buffs, and possibly a stray marked, or heavily variegated, which, however, depends upon how the parents have been bred. The majority will be ticked with clears running-up. The young from the cinnamon hen, assuming the cock is of the above-named type, will be heavily variegated, self, and broken greens. If the cock has cinnamon blood in him, and the ticked hen is ticked with cinnamon colour—a point you omit to mention—then from both hens the combined progeny will show clears, ticks, marked, foul and self cinnamons. All the markings in latter event will be cinnamon colour.

WHAT TO DO (W. M.).—If you cannot cajole her, humour her. That's about the only line to follow with a hen that refuses to notice the nest pan and persists in laying her eggs on the floor of cage. If the pan is very shaky, fix it more firmly; if it hangs on one end of cage near the front it may be too exposed for her, and you might try putting some cover on the cage front, a square of brown paper for instance, just in front of nest pan to shield it a little from outside gazers; or try hanging it on the back of cage, slightly above level of perches. If none of these arrangements please her, then use a square, or flat-bottomed, nest-box and stand it on the cage floor where she seems to fancy her nest ought to be. In the latter position she will doubtless succumb to its charms. Then when she has built, laid, and commenced to sit, you may try moving the box an inch or two daily with the object of getting it to the back or end of cage, and suspended a little above the sand tray. Some hens will allow this to be done, or even accept the situation if the box is then hung in its usual place. On the other hand, there are hypersensitive creatures that will not even allow the box to be moved from where it was first placed. Only individual judgment and discretion can be of service in these cases. As this is the hen's first clutch, it is quite possible she may show a more tractable disposition with the next nest.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

BUDGERIGARS (J. W., Junr.).—You give no details as to how you are keeping them, nesting accommodation, etc., but assuming this to be at least average, I am of the opinion that there will be better luck with the next brood. In the absence of any information as to treatment, etc., I cannot even guess at cause or suggest remedy.

DOVES, ETC. (R. McG.).—I have sent you the article, and trust that with the information already given it will meet your need. I may say that the reprint practically covers the needs of all the smaller species of Doves, and with the addition of Dove mixture would cover the needs of most of the larger species. Senegal Turtle Doves are on the market at the present time, 5s. 6d. per pair, and this species would be a good variety for you to begin with—they are certainly handsome birds. Australian Crested Pigeons also offered in CAGE BIRDS for April 26th are another hardy and handsome species.

BIRDS FOR SMALL AVIARY (G. H. Smith).—I fear you have altogether an erroneous idea as to the accommodation capacity of your small aviary. The outside limit is three pairs for breeding, and 18 to 20 as a mere collection of pets. In so small an aviary you must be careful what British species you include. Redpoll, Twite, Linnet, and Siskin are fairly safe. What I really advise is for you to put in pairs each of Zebra and Bib Finches, both of which will probably breed, also pairs of Avadavats, Gold-breasted Waxbills, Orange-cheeked Waxbills, and Silverbills—all are pretty, some really beautiful, and they would make a nice show. Do not include any British species at all. Most of the above birds are quite small, and your aviary will accommodate them comfortably. Your aviary would be better with a wood and glass shutter for use at night, and also during the worst of winter's days.

WILL IT DO FOR GOULDIAN FINCHES? (J. A. W.).—Yes, and they should breed as soon as they have settled down, which should not take long. I should suggest a glazed shutter to fit over the wire-netting front of shelter for night use, and also during the whole of the winter. Cover the back of the shelter with twiggy branches, so as to supply plenty of cover, and at back of the branches hang plenty of nest receptacles—rush nests, husks, Hartz travelling cages, and boxes—on the wall; the nest receptacles will have the warmest position, and also be partially screened by the branches. Zebra Finches usually rear young without difficulty on seed and greenfood alone, but I always keep a small saucer of insectile mixture (soft food) in the aviary when the Finches are feeding young. Why not try and get a good photo. of the nest, as the situation is a natural one?

A FEATHER PULLER (G. H. Barnwell).—Your friend must contrive some sort of a bandage over the wound for a time, first anointing it with a little healing ointment. Get a copy of our Nutshell No. 17, 2½d., post free from our manager, and bring your dietary into line with the directions given therein. These cases of feather-pulling are almost incurable, and, at best, any remedial measures are a work of time and patience. You must not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. So long as its voidings are not watery loose, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day—the bowels must be kept moving quite freely, but there must be nothing approaching diarrhœa; if such occurs, then only give the magnesia once a week. On the days you are not giving the magnesia put half a teaspoonful of hypo-phosphates in the drinking water. Spray it with a tepid quassia solution once or twice a week. Also any piece of cake or crust you give it should be first slightly moistened, and then lightly dusted with flowers of sulphur. Persevere with the above treatment for a month, and then report progress with full details.

PIGEONS, STARLINGS, ETC. (R.H.W.).—As regards the Crested Pigeons I should put them altogether in some small place, and as soon as the cock has chosen a mate put the pair back again in the aviary and get rid of the other two. Re Long-tailed Glossy Starlings, I do not remember the connection in which I advised these; some pairs are almost vicious with small birds and others, but would be all right with Parrakeets, Doves, Pigeons, etc., and if I remember rightly, it was in this connection I advised them. I do not advise Budgerigars and Parrakeets with Finches, Waxbills, etc.; there is always a risk about it, and sooner or later one has to pay the price of such experiments. At the same time, in my garden aviary, with small seed-eaters and softbills, I have Cowbirds, Cardinals, Ouzels, Malabar Starlings, etc., and they do not materially interfere with each other; but, they have plenty of space.

GREY PARROT (J. G. D.).—Continue the magnesia and hypo-phosphates for some time with this bird, but do not give the former sufficiently often for the voidings to remain watery loose; at the same time the bowels should move quite freely. The bird would do well enough on canary seed alone; do not overdo the sunflower seed. Bathe its nostrils with dilute glyco-thymoline while the irritation lasts, and also several times a week put a little honey and borax in its mouth. Most Parrots will take this readily from the end of a small stick. The diet is about right, but I should add a pinch of Parrot grit to the daily supply of seed. Your general treatment is about right; a bird ought to be able to get a little sun, at the same time not to have it shining directly upon it for any lengthy period. The plumage will come right in due course, neither do I think there is anything permanently wrong with the bird. We are getting more genial weather now. Treat as above and report progress in about two months. As soon as it loses its timidity, coming out of its cage a little daily will benefit it.

Gouldians (Gould). I am much interested to hear of a probable Yellow headed Gouldian among the recent consignment, and shall try and learn a little more about it. I am sorry you have lost the hen, but that is usually the end in such cases. Now, re the pair which lay, and do not incubate satisfactorily. I should take out the rush nest and immerse it for a minute or two in boiling water, then well swill with cold, and when dry return it to the cage. As soon as the newly-acquired hens are tolerably fit, take away the laying hen from her present mate, giving him one of the new hens, and put his hen with your old cock. This re-arrangement may give you some results this summer.

BUDGERIGAR OVERFAT (Anxious).- As Budgerigars are such small drinkers you had better catch this bird and give it three drops of Dinneford's Magnesia (neat) direct to the beak every other day for a week, and then every fourth day for a fortnight or three weeks. Also give her, and the others also, as much seeding (flowering) grass as they will eat for the next three or four months—in fact, till frost comes round again. Even if you are a town dweller it should be easy enough to arrange with some cottager just outside your town to send you in a small parcel by post two or three times a week while the season lasts, and it will mean much to your birds. You should supply, as possibly you do, a little flint grit and cuttlebone regularly.

BUDGERIGARS (P. E. Y.).—It is easy to be definite on one point; the trouble does not arise from interference by the Weavers. During the last few years there have occurred many similar cases to your own; still, the fact remains that with the main body of those who keep them, that the popular Budgerigar, if not quite so tractable as of yore, is still as prolific as ever. From facts gathered over a longish period, I deduce that the fault is mainly confined to a few individuals, is not always a permanent one, and most frequently occurs with young birds with their first, or first and second nests; there are cases which stand outside the above conditions, and which I put down as extraordinarily exceptional. There are two courses open to you—(1) To possess yourself in patience and await events; (2) to get some friend or dealer to exchange the hen for another. Perhaps the last-named will be the quicker way out of your difficulty. Of course, if the Budgies have been recently put in, the trouble may disappear as they become more settled. I presume mice have not access to the nests.

GETTING RAGGED (B. C. Twiss).—I do not think there is much wrong with the bird, but so long as the voidings are not watery-loose, I should put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and if the bowels become too loose, then only give it once a week, and in between, i.e., when not giving the magnesia put a little hypo-phosphates (say, half a teaspoonful) in the drinking water every other day. In addition to the seed mixture, it can have ripe fruit liberally, plain biscuit, and shelled nuts. The bird evidently does not bathe freely, and you should spray it regularly (say, twice a week), now the weather is more genial, with a weak, tepid solution of quassia; it will be a wise precaution to continue to spray with the solution for some little period. It is a young bird, and such are irregular in their moults at first. Treat as above and report progress in another month.

YELLOW-WINGED SUGAR BIRDS (Enthusiast).—The Sugar Birds can go out with your Finches as soon as the weather is a little more settled; you must be guided by the weather in your own district. In the meantime, they will do in the greenhouse, providing you can find them a fairly dry corner free from draught, and they must also be sheltered from the full power of the sun shining through glass. During the winter they can be kept anywhere where there is room for exercise, and the temperature does not fall below 45 degrees Fahr. Diet: Milk sop and ripe fruit will form the main dietary. Milk sop prepare so: Crumbled sponge cake one tablespoonful, condensed milk two teaspoonfuls, saltspoonful of Mellin's Food, teaspoonful of honey, and four tablespoonfuls (two ounces) of boiling water—well stir together, and supply to the birds when cool. My birds get mostly banana and grapes; they are fond of a small spider, and when outdoors catch a good many midges, and eat a lot of blight. They got as far as eggs in my outdoor aviary (Surrey) last year.

RIBBON FINCH AND STARLING (J. W.).—An ordinary Canary breeding cage is none too large for this species; still, young have been reared in such a cage, but a double breeder with the partitions removed would be better. However, if you can do no better, fix a Hartz travelling cage at one end, right up against the cage, after removing the fittings and perches, and cutting away a couple of the bars to enable the birds to get in and out; hay, grass, and a little moss will suffice for nesting material. Supply the ordinary seeds and green-food, and as soon as the young are due to hatch, supply liberally either live or preserved ants' cocoons. Re the Starling, supply this with as much fruit as it will eat—any kind it will take; also supply any kind of insect, their larvæ and pupæ, that your garden and near hedgerows will produce. Keep a tin of seed mixture in the cage, and also add a good portion of grated raw carrot to the daily supply of soft food mixture. Give the glauber salts or Dinneford's Magnesia once a week while the trouble lasts, and in between put it on a course of hypo-phosphates for a month, and let it have frequent exercise outside the cage; the latter will do more for it than drugs.

GOLDFINCH AND MULE BREEDING (Richmond).—Your question is very difficult to answer. It is no use pairing the bird up until he is in full, vigorous song, also properly "sprung" (which can be told by examining the vent). I should say that this cannot be until about the middle of June, at the earliest. What caused the late moult? If it is a cross (or second) moult, then the bird may not come into proper breeding condition at all this year.

LINNET IN MOULT (H. J. W.).- It all depends upon how soon the bird throws off the effects of the cross moult (note reply given "Richmond" this week). If the Linnet comes into breeding condition, then it can certainly be paired with the hen Canary. Stick to the course of treatment I advised last week.

YOUNG MULES (E. Allison).—It is useless to give colour-food except when birds are moulting, or actually growing feathers. Thus to colour-feed birds for young-bird (first feather) shows, they must be fed in the nest. It is, however, quite unnecessary so to do, as it is the accepted practice to exhibit young birds in their natural colour. You should commence to give these youngsters a little weak colour-food about the first week in June (not later), and increase the strength gradually, or at once should you notice any feathers falling. (2) The value is really just whatever you can get for him.

GOLDFINCH MULE "AILING" (J. Wheeldon).—I do not gather from your letter that anything much ails your Mule. The "savageness" of which you speak (pecking at you through the cage wires with wings extended and beak open) is generally merely a sign of excessive familiarity on the part of a bird—that familiarity which breeds contempt, so to speak, of its owner. Mules in particular are very prone to express in this manner their delight (for, after all, this is what it really amounts to) at the presence of anyone they know well. It is, at any rate, much more likely to be symptomatic of vigour and high condition than of ill-health. Does the bird sit still and look mopy and miserable, or put its head under its "wing"? Does it sing? Has it ever sung (i.e., are you sure it is a cock?). If you will enlighten me further I will, if needful, try to help you.

BRITISH BIRD & HYBRID QUERISTS

should consult Boulton's great work, "Cage-Bird Hybrids" (7/6); Norman's "British Bird Manual' (2/3); or Part 1 "Hardbills" (1/1), Part 2 "Softbills" (1/1); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); "Secrets of Hybrid Breeding" (1/2); Dr. Creswell's "Hygiene of Bird-keeping" (1/1); Dr Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding' (3½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each): No. 1 "Goldfinch," No. 2 "Linnet," No. 3 "Skylark," No. 4 "Song Thrush and Blackbird," No. 11 "Bullfinch," No. 13 "Chaffinch," No. 15 "Greenfinch," No. 22 "Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite," Na. 25 "Small Insectivoraus Birds," No. 26 "Large Insectivorous Birds," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How ta Cure Them," No. 9 "Disinfection of Cages, Birdrooms, etc.," No. 12 "How ta Moult British Birds." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE CASE OF A LINNET (Linnet Lover).—Nothing to be alarmed at, but the condition of the excrement should be put to rights. Stop all linseed for the time being, and all black (or English) rape, if any is given to them. See that the stock mixture contains a large amount of teazle. Get one ounce of crystals of citrate of iron and quinine from a chemist, and for four or five days dissolve in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water as much as will lie on a threepennybit. Give this daily, and in a glass or earthenware (not tin) vessel. Watch its effect on the bird's bowels and regulate its use accordingly.

TWO STARLINGS (Bunnyip).—It may be that the food is too "heavy"—too starchy in composition—and not easy of digestion. This type of packet food, while good enough in its way, should only form a portion of a Starling's diet—this bird needs ripe fruit freely, and a liberal allowance of live food of various kinds (offer anything that strikes you as suitable). There cannot be anything wrong with the birds so long as they continue "singing." To ask whether you could give a Starling too many gentles is tantamount to asking whether you could give a Scotsman too much—well, oatmeal. The answer is in the negative.

Several replies are unavoidably held over.—Ed.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

South West.—Pulmonary apoplexy, with rupture of a blood vessel on the lungs. Primarily, congestion of the lungs occurs, until the tension in the blood vessels becomes so high as to cause rupture of a blood vessel.

GENERAL.

Ned Oxy.—Your yarn of the hen Canary egg-bound with an egg, which on being opened contained a fully formed chick, almost caused us to collapse, but after a double dose of the usual remedy, we feel pretty fit again, thank you.

T. E. Wheatley.—Many thanks; will have sketches made and utilise next week.

Correspondence.

The Appeal for the Gateshead and District C.B.S.

Sir,—Would you be kind enough to acknowledge through CAGE BIRDS this week the sum of 10s. 6d., which the Committee of the Bournemouth and District Cage Bird Association have kindly sent us towards our funds, and we heartily thank them for same.

W. CURRY, Hon. Sec.

Cage Life Better Than Freedom.

Sir,—Seeing by CAGE BIRDS that some people are against caging wild birds, perhaps this little experience of mine may prove of interest to them. About a year ago I purchased a fresh-caught cock Goldfinch, and about a week ago I hung him outside in a cage. Somehow he escaped, and I never expected to see him again. Next morning, however, I found him clinging to his cage, and when the door was opened he gladly entered, and seems to prefer cage life to freedom.

Kildary. D. ROBERTSON.

An Interesting Mating Problem.

Sir,—One of my best Norwich hens, two years old, has, much to my surprise, hatched out four fine youngsters. I mated her with an unflighted cock. They fought for nine days, the hen being victorious the first three, and the cock the remainder. He mauled her to such an extent, and destroyed her nest so repeatedly that I took him away. The following day I gave her the cock she was mated to last year, and the next morning she laid. I might say copulation took place within ten minutes of being together. What I should like to know, is whether any of the four eggs could be fertilised by the last cock bird. Or must I reckon the first to be the father of the whole clutch?

J. E.L.

Black Mealworms.

Sir,—Allow me to thank you for sending on the specimens of black mealworms submitted by Mr. Arthur. I was particularly interested in these, and quite expected to see something new—to me at least—but in this I am disappointed. The specimens sent are precisely the same dusky colour as those I have seen on former occasions, which were termed black, and to which I referred in my last letter. That they were considerably darker—a dusky hue—than the normal colour I readily agree, but, personally I cannot by any stretch of imagination call them "black." I have an idea that any environment in the locality of decaying woodwork or timber, particularly of oak, would cause the normally coloured mealworm to assume this dusky hue, after, perhaps, a few "moults." It would be interesting to know if these mealworms were taken in such environments.

CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

The Troubles of a Corpulent Blackbird.

Sir,—Have any of your readers ever heard of a similar case to this, related by a correspondent of the "Scotsman"? He says:—"Quite a number of people are writing just now about the strange places in which birds build their nests. I am reminded by these accounts of a nest which, after its erection, caused the builders a considerable amount of trouble. It was inside a grating—presumably a ventilator—in the wall of one of the Oxford colleges. The site was an admirable one; but, unfortunately, the occupants forgot to reckon at the outset on the possibility, as the season advanced, of their growing so stout as to be unable to get through the narrow apertures made by the transverse iron bars. As a result, probably, of extra good living—for it was a rainy season, and worms were plentiful—the parent birds developed such admirable physical proportions that they experienced an amazing, though not insuperable difficulty in getting out of and into the nest with food for their young ones. What happened usually was as follows:—Paterfamilias arrive with the provender and put his head through one of the holes. Then he pushed and struggled and pushed again, but all to no purpose. Presently the whole family within was in an uproar, for they had seen the worm which was so near and yet so far; and, possibly, they sympathised with the bird in his awkward predicament. This violent exercise lasted for several minutes, till eventually he succeeded in winning his way through. What exactly took place towards the finish it was never an easy matter to tell, but it looked uncommonly as though one of the ravenous, impatient brood had caught hold of him with its beak and given just that final, necessary fillip which resulted in extricating the corpulent bird and causing him to drop, breathless, down into the nest, still holding tightly to the appetising worm. The subsequent happenings in the nest were hidden from the eyes of the curious spectator down below; but one could not help wondering sometimes whether the joy of the proud parent, as he watched his offspring feeding, was not somewhat damped by the thought of similar efforts that would have to be expended in order to obtain a repetition of such a scene of domestic felicity.

W. STRACHAN.

Two Perfect Eggs in One Day.

Sir,—In answer to N. Pollit's letter in last week's grand Spring Number concerning the two eggs in one day. At the beginning of March I paired up a Linnet cock to a yellow and green Roller hen (bred July, 1912). On Sunday night, March 30, I looked at the nest and found that there were no eggs, though the hen seemed as if she would have laid two or three days before. On Monday morning, whilst attending to the numerous wants of my little feathered friends, I found two eggs in their nest, which, I might say, she had completed about a week before, and had been continually sitting on. Both eggs were quite perfect, and the same size as her others which were laid on three following days, they were both clears, however. I should be very interested to hear if Mr. Pollit got a youngster from either of the eggs.

A Self-fixing Perch.

SIR,—I am sending an illustration of a perch which I use, and which is handy for taking out to clean without putting the hand in the cage, and if left clear of the back of the cage it is springy like a twig when the bird alights thereon. A A are the fine saw cuts through which the wires pass, and if the part B is hollowed out dish-like it forms a handy receptacle for tit-bits, which can be placed on through the wires. The perch is placed edge-wise through the wires, and a half-turn holds it fast.

Hearing the Song of the Nightingale.

Sir,—Would you or any of your readers kindly inform me, through the columns of your paper, in what part of England the Nightingale is most likely to be heard singing, and at what months of the year? I intend spending my holidays with my wife in England this year, and would prefer to stay in a part of the country where I might have the opportunity of hearing the song of the Nightingale. As you are aware, the bird is never heard in Ireland.

IRISHMAN.

[The range of the Nightingale is sufficiently wide to afford our correspondent plenty of choice of locality. Even quite near London (in Epping Forest, to wit) he can make sure of hearing the music of this grand songster at its very best. We have heard two or three singing beautifully in the daytime right at the edge of Connaught Waters; but night, of course, is the ideal time. May is the best month of all, but late April and early June are also favourable times, though the song ceases when the young birds hatch. Some Nightingales sing until much later than others, owing, no doubt, to something going wrong with the first nest, necessitating the starting of a second. In Herefordshire Nightingales abound, and they are plentiful in the Surrey woods, Kent, parts of Suffolk, etc. In fact, in any of the Home Counties the bird can be found with certainty, and its range extends westward to certain of the river valleys of Devon.—EDITOR.]

Proposed Roller Canary Society for North Staffordshire.

Sir,—Will you kindly announce that a meeting, to inaugurate the above specialist society, will be held at Evans's Cafe, opposite Town Hall, High Street, Newcastle, on May 10, at 7 p.m. Business to elect officers, arrange subscription fee (it is advocated that this shall be 2s. per year, payable 1s. each six months until an open show was held) this would cover all expenses which are likely to be incurred. There are about ten fanciers willing to join, and anyone interested in this variety of Canary will be welcomed.

Some Reminiscences of an Old Bird-lover.

Sir,—I was very pleased indeed to read "Very Old Subscriber's" most interesting letter in your excellent double number, and can heartily endorse what he has written as to the total indifference with which the average non-fancier regards any birds he or she is forced to look at. The ordinary Londoner who takes no interest in birds, knows of four British birds only, so far as I can judge. All brownish or greyish birds about the size of a Bunting are "Sparrows," all about the size and hue of the Starling are "Blackbirds," and all others either "Crows" or "Pigeons." In Dulwich Park, however, where there is a variety of birds in aviaries—with the names painted up on boards—visitors are much better informed. There, any Sunday, you may hear the self-complacent youth explain to the maiden that the cock Bullfinch and Chaffinch are the "Robin Redbreast," the cock Greenfinch the "Yellowhammer," the Kestrel the "Eagle," and the Golden Pheasant the "Peacock." I simply cannot understand why so few people take any interest whatever in birds—other than the edible varieties which, of course, are always popular—compared with the millions of flower maniacs. I know it is wrong to disparage other people's hobbies, but how much more interesting than a few flowers is a nice aviary with some beautiful, steady British or Foreign birds disporting themselves in the sunshine, and by their notes and movements taking one back to the scenes of early youth amongst woods, glens, and hillsides, where there was room to breathe God's air, and time to think. How much nicer, too, are the habits of the average bird compared with those of the average dog or cat!

Short Entries at Scottish Shows

Sir,—Kindly grant me space to answer "Plainheads" questions in his last epistle. First, he asks if "clique" judges were the cause of short entries where I won my prizes. I say they were in many cases the cause, and "P.H." knows that he visited very few shows where he did not hear it spoken of. These last two years it has been ridiculous, and so openly seen that no one could help talking about it. "P.H.," being the mouthpiece of the clique, has made a very poor defence on their behalf. Secondly, he asks what I mean by asking the members of the B.F.C.C. to review the list of prizewinners' (club specials). Well, I will make it easier for him to understand. Supposing that A judged a show and awarded B the medal for best Border, then the next week the reverse happened (i.e. B awarded one to A); well, I say that if the judges' names were printed along with the shows they judge it would be easy for any member to see that a good many of the medals are awarded on the "family system." As for "five firsts for fifteen years," I think the Fancy knows better than believe such rubbish. But allow me to say that "P.H." has won more first prizes within the last two years than he has done since he started in the Fancy nineteen years ago. He has surely made a big improvement in his stock, if "clique judges" are not the cause. I must say plainly there is a clique of Scottish judges, and next year will prove it, for, as far as I can see from CAGE BIRDS, only two have been engaged to judge, while some of them had six shows at this time last year. Committees are guessing right. Now I think I have said enough to satisfy any even-minded man, but will wait for your further reasons for short entries at Scottish shows, and trust that you will have the courage to add your name to your letter.

Whitburn. W. LAMBIE.

Sir,—I am glad to see "Plainhead" has seen his error in defending "Clique" judges, and that we are going to have a change. I quite admit that the above are not the sole cause of short entries; but at the latter end of last season, when the "Clique" became known, fanciers of note gave them a wide berth. Some shows had only clique birds as entries. If Plainhead goes back a week or two, he will find it was he himself who started the mud-throwing. But if mud is all you have to wash off your hands, "P.H.," soap will do it. You could not gather courage to face me; I suppose, being one of my guessed medal winners, that would be enough for you. Like yourself, I have won 1st prizes every year since I started in the Fancy, and with no clique judges, but I have also got nothing many a time, and yet no clique judges. One judge told me himself that he had told another judge, before he went away to officiate at a certain show, not to give him this nor that if he was not value for it. What right has a fancier of any station to dictate to any judge? The best of the joke was that the judge he was dictating to had better birds, and had won more prizes. "Plainhead" says our meeting would serve no good purpose. No, as far as you are concerned, for I should have let you know a great deal you already know; but it might have helped you a bit for the future, and made certain judges look more at the birds than the cages. I suppose the fancier with 3 and 4 and 5 1sts on the one day, and nothing at the following show, does not appeal to "Plainhead." Neither does my observation about the cage bottoms and the judge naming the fancier the cages belonged to. I do not require any one to inform me who "Plainhead" is, because I have known all along. You need not boast because you wrote yourself this last time. I refuse to believe it when you say you wrote all along without assistance. We across in Fifeshire know better than that. I also think that I am as well-known as "Plainhead," but I am glad to say in a different light and I do not require to advertise myself. All my letters have been of my own making with the exception of the information about your breeding season, which came two ways; one from one of the clique and the other from a more reliable source. Of course, I am not concerned, even if you do not breed more than 13 this year. As you say, there are plenty to be had. I know, myself, of a certain fancier and judge who bought 46 birds from one fancier. Perhaps you may know also. I sincerely hope that you do not think that I would judge you by myself. That cannot, nor ever will, happen. Despite all your malice and spleen towards me in this correspondence, the truth has triumphed and I am sufficiently pleased to see by CAGE BIRDS that it has done good. I am sure my only wish was to uplift the Border Fancy out of the mire into which it was fast going. Remember, "Plainhead," I am not a coward, and the first time you visit Dysart I will be pleased to give to you what you have refused to me, namely, proofs of all I have written. I thank you, Mr. Editor, for giving so much space to this vexed question.

Reminiscences of a Veteran Roller Canary Fancier.

Sir,—With Mr. Fawcett's permission I send you the following reminiscences of a veteran Roller fancier,—J. TOMLINSON.

Whitby, April 19, 1913.

Sir,—On opening my CAGE BIRDS to-day, I noticed your article on the Roller Canary, and thought you would be kind enough to help me. My old father was a Canary breeder all his life, and when I was just turned 20 years of age—that was in 1861—I was a journeyman tailor in London. While in a hair-dresser's shop I heard a German Roller singing, I was so impressed with this bird's singing powers, that I have loved them ever since. I made inquiries respecting them, as I thought what a nice present one would make for my dear old father. I was directed to a Mr. Hawkins, whose shop was just off Leicester Square. I purchased one, and Mr. Hawkins sent it down. At that time they were unknown, and I set all the town fanciers mad. I believe I sold ten or twelve birds for Mr. Hawkins. I often visited him, and we became quite friendly. A fire occurred, and he had his shop burnt down, and all his splendid birds suffered, but worst of all he had a son burnt to death. I never saw Mr. Hawkins again, afterwards. My thoughts have always been to breed or at least to keep a songster. I have kept all varieties, but I still look back to the German songster.

Affairs of the Lancashire C.A.

Sir,—I see the Lancashire Canary Association is in danger of being broken up. I don't wonder at it. The officials are a great deal to blame, for whoever reads any reports of their meetings, etc., or hears of them? For the last two or three years, very little is known until about October, that there is such a society in existence. They want rousing up a bit. Oh! for two or three Teddy Fullers. It is said the novices are the backbone of any Fancy. Where are they? Well, they have not got the birds to breed or exhibit with. I see the secretary is asking for suggestions. Has he none to make? I have some, of which later. What have the "top notchers" to say about this state of affairs, and the novices—and more especially the prize-winners?

The N.B.B. and M.C. Country Ramble.

An Invitation to London Societies.

Sir,—The annual ramble of the National British Bird and Mule Club will take place on Saturday, 24th May, in Epping Forest. The morning party leave Liverpool Street Station by the 9.36 a.m. train for Chingford, and the afternoon party by the 1.33 train for Loughton, and meet the morning party at the "Robin Hood." Arrangements are being made for a hot lunch, ad lib, for 1 o'clock at the "Owl," 2s. per head, also a meat tea at the "Robin Hood" at 6 o'clock, 1s. 6d. per head. My committee extend a hearty welcome to the members and friends of all London societies who would like to join us in the ramble. Will all those who wish to join let me know by Monday, 19th May, stating which party they would like to join, so that arrangements can be made for refreshments?

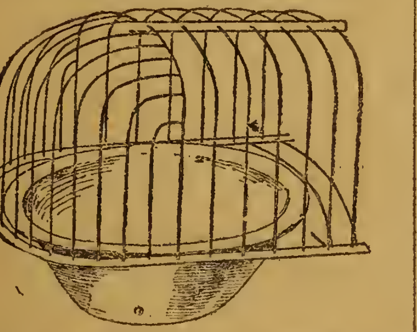
To Prevent Hens from Plucking their Young.

Sir,—Herewith is a "Nest Cage," for use if the hen starts plucking the young. The nest is simply slipped in from the back, and then the contrivance is hung on the hook. I was last year troubled with such a hen, and this is the outcome. If you think it worthy of a sketch in your most valuable paper, please get your artist to make the sketch. Then I should be pleased if one of your staff would accept the nest cage, and give it a trial. I wish Cage Birds every success.

W. H. Hamlyn.



P.S.—I have had an occasion to use the "Nest Guard," and it has proved very successful. The hen feeds well through the wires, and the young keep well out of her way, so that she cannot pluck them.

A Vexed Point at Our Shows.

The Half Prize Money Rule.

Sir,—I should like "Young Exhibitor" to once again read my letter, as I clearly stated "should pay the greater part of the prize money," and not all the expenses, as he states in his letter. I think no show committee would grumble if they had enough in entrance fees to pay all expenses! Neither would there be any disappointed exhibitors, nor half prize money. He also says in his letter that the gate depends for the greater part on fanciers. If he lives in a part that is blessed with so many fanciers he ought not to experience many shows with half prize money—in our part we could count them all on our hands with no trouble. I quite agree with him about some classes having extraordinary entries, but if you look at the other classes you may find some of them with two or three entries, and you want some good classes to pay for these. I think if you take a show on the average and work it out, as I did, you will not find many shows that can come to a better average. I say prize money does not depend on the committee, but on the exhibitor. If he is willing to give bumping entries then they are willing to give him something worth competing for. It is not altogether the exhibitors that want encouraging, but the committee as well. If "Young Exhibitor's" letter did not contain the statement that he could not stand half prize money, it certainly did contain this, that cards do not buy birds nor keep fanciers' homes going. I quite agree with him regarding the big exhibitors having the pull over us younger ones, but it is not so much experience as it is the money. For instance, if a big exhibitor requires a bird for show, he writes to a dealer and asks him what date he will be having a good consignment in. Off he then goes to the dealer and can have his pick out of hundreds, where we have to pick ours out of perhaps six or seven—we cannot expect to get the same, nor make the money he does of them. As for buying birds from big exhibitors and not knowing whether they are the ones you pay for, let me advise "Young Exhibitor," as I have advised others before, that it will pay you to visit a show and buy your birds there. Then you can see what you are buying, and very often you may find a better bird in a class than even the bird that has won. I have seen good birds many times in a show at a fair price. Regarding a profit on exhibiting, I have shown pigeons and birds for the past twelve years, but I never expected to make a profit by it, and if I had I find I should have been disappointed.

A. E. Bareham.

Rearing Young Canaries on Bread and Milk.

Sir,—Last breeding season I paired up two Yorkshire Canaries, and had two nests from them. The first nest I got four eggs, all fertile, but only one bird hatched out, the other three eggs having dead birds in. The second nest I got three eggs, and two birds hatched out; one egg unfertile. I got the three birds up splendidly by feeding them on bread moistened with milk, also giving dandelion leaves and white canary seed. I kept them with their parents until they were five weeks old, then I took them away and I fed them on the same food until they were seven weeks old. Then I fed on nothing but canary seed. These birds came on splendidly. They were reared in a single breeding cage and kept in a cold room.

J. Harrison.

The R.S.P.C.A. and the Hobby of Bird-keeping.

Sir,—The "snivelling" mentioned by your correspondent, Mr. A. R. Cole, is certainly on his side, in his statement that my protest was political. This is the typical political "snivel" that is thrown at one when a truth is thrust home. I am glad it hit. This is the fetish that such "sensitive souls" as your correspondent hide behind when abuses in certain directions are attacked. I have neither the time nor patience to bother about politics, but I am certain that my statement concerning the activities and inactivities of the R.S.P.C.A. cannot be refuted. I could mention scores of types of gross cruelty which they do not and dare not touch because they are connected with the pastimes of the rich. I have not always lived in a city; I was reared in a sporting county. I have frequently seen a sporting dog thrashed to an inch of its life by a gamekeeper in the process of "training"—far greater suffering than any bird undergoes at the hands of the average bird-keeper. I have also seen a horse fastened with an instrument, causing blood to stream from its mouth, as a punishment. How often I have seen tame ducks and pheasants chased to make them fly to receive a volley of lead, to say nothing about the cruel trapping that goes on, rabbits, birds, and other animals sometimes lying for days in the cruel gin trap, dying a lingering death from hunger, thirst and pain. There is plenty of work for the R.S.P.C.A. They could well afford to leave the Society for the Protection of Birds to look after the poor man bird-keeper, their speciality being the protection of birds. I have frequently been called in to assist this latter society in its decision to purchase a bird for releasing and to decide if others were of the type that were likely to suffer by caging. I am in sympathy with this work when done reasonably and justly.

J. W. Cutmore.

So far as the "political" aspect of this question is concerned, discussion must now close. We have received a letter from Mr. A. Best (supporting Mr. Coe), and one from Mr. W. Hainsworth (opposing Mr. Coe), but no good purpose can be served by their publication, as politics are taboo in our columns.—Editor.

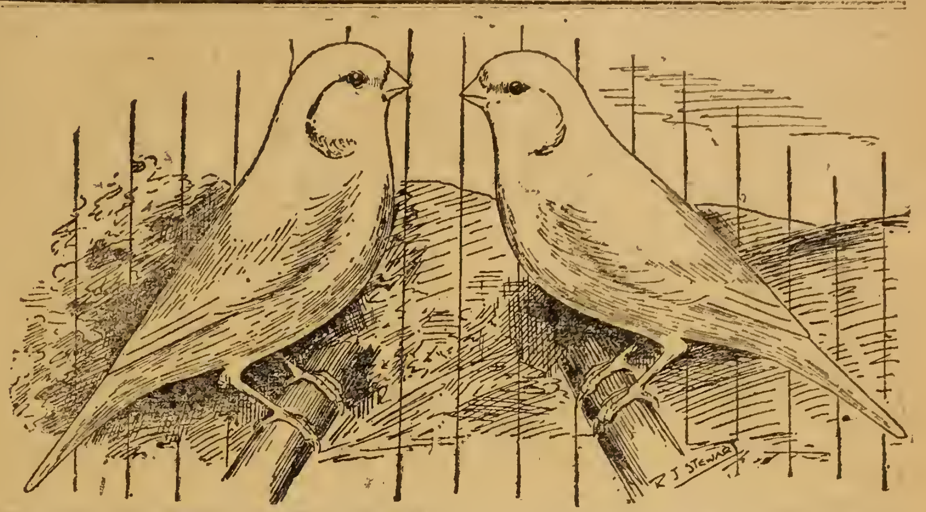
Late Entries at the Crystal Palace 1913 Show.

Sir,—I notice Mr. Godley again, after a rest, writing under the above heading, but what he has to gain, or the manager of the Crystal Palace show to lose, I cannot see. Surely in the first place, when he admits his entries were late, that is quite sufficient to show he is in the wrong. It is an old saying that two wrongs don't make a right. Mr. G. says he has done wrong for over 20 years, and evidently thinks he must be allowed to do so for ever, or as long as he thinks fit. Having done wrong for over twenty years in sending late entries, does he wish to explain that that alone makes this year's wrong "right"? I think the manager of our great national show is to be complimented in saying: No, sir, you have come this long enough, toe the mark and enter according to rule. Two years ago I had my own entries returned as too late. I did not rush into print and try to "show up" the management of the Crystal Palace, and by so doing show myself up instead. I should not have taken the trouble to write on this subject only for the fact that Mr. Godley states that his letter will show your readers that he has every justification for the position he has taken up. I don't see it. If he refers to the front of the Palace schedule he will find he has no justification when he reads in large letters that entries absolutely close Jan. 25. I have always had the greatest courtesy shown to me by the Palace officials, and I don't like to see our great national fixture run down, especially when the man is in the wrong who is doing it.

T. Gilbert.



Mr. Stewart has depicted two Norwich Plainheads which achieved good records at Scottish shows. The clear buff cock (on the left) is the property of Mr. Jas. Smeaton, of Prestonpans, and the clear yellow hen of Mr. R. B. Jarvie, of Glasgow.

The Southern Norwich Plainhead Club's Classification.

Is the Clear Unfairly Handicapped?

Sir,—Seeing the notice of the above club in your issue of the 12th inst., asking clubs to apply for its patronage, I thought to have seen some protest against what to me seems a great injustice. Just think for one moment; a schedule of the leading societies being issued without a class for clear yellow or Buff Norwich. In my young days as a fancier, about 20 years ago, I was taught the ideal of a Plainhead was a perfect clear, either yellow or buff. Now, seeing the P.H. is a bird of colour, what chance will the clear get against the tick, providing other points are about equal? as it is admitted the ticks come hotter than clears. Of course, colour will win; then out go the clears and down will go the entries. To me it is making four classes for ticks, etc., which I hope fanciers will fight against. I am surprised at the mover of the resolution doing himself such an injustice, seeing he is an old exhibitor. I hope some abler pen than mine will take this matter up, so as to get this altered, and I hope any fancier replying will use his name, so that his views may be taken at their proper value.

J. E. Rowe.

The Anniversary of a Wedding Day.

Sir,—I am a Roller Canary, and my wife is a Norwich. We are both three years of age, and were married two years ago. This is the anniversary of our wedding day. I cannot tell you in writing how happy we are, and what a splendid home we have. Suffice it to say our home is 24 x 16 x 20 inches, which was limewashed, and is in every respect equal to a palace to us; anyway, our master gave us a beautiful nest pan, clean as a new pin, some lovely moss and cow hair. We made a cosy nest and have five lovely large eggs. We were so afraid when master saw egg No. 5 he would take it away, but he hasn't. He has taken them away before, as we have heard him say he considers four eggs enough. Anyway I intend to let him see that my husband and I can manage them all right, and we hope to have a nice family soon. We reared 15 last year; bonny birds they were, too, and my husband taught them to sing his beautiful song. Those that couldn't sing have now husbands of their own, and they tell us they are also very happy. We had such a shock a short time ago. A lady came up to see us and our other companions. When she said what a lovely pair (meaning us), will you sell them? my husband left off singing and came and sat close to me, in awful suspense, which did not last very long, as our master said, oh, no, he would not part with us at any price. So she bought two of our daughters and one son. We should like to tell you that we do not have horrid pepper given us to eat to make us an unnatural colour. We have beautiful plumage like silk, and we are quite content to look clean and nice, as all natural Canaries should. We overheard our master say one day how would the masters of some Canaries like to be fed on pepper themselves to make them a yellow or orange colour? We hope some of our family will be nice big birds, and if they behave themselves they will be sent to the shows and we shall feel very proud of them if they get a card for us to see in our room, and be something in return for the kindness we have received. We have what we call greenfood days, when our young mistress—a dear little girl who, by the way, is very fond of us—and our master, or, if very busy, our mistress, brings us lovely bunches of watercress, groundsel (which a kindly gardener sends for us), and sometimes a few dandelion leaves, chickweed or other dainty morsels; which we enjoy very much. We have egg food days also. We enjoy the lovely new laid hard boiled eggs and bread crumbs, with castor sugar and maw seed. In fact, we have a good time and everything we could wish for, and hope all birds receive as good attention and treatment as we get, and in conclusion we do not think it cruel to keep birds in cages if kindly treated and cared for.

The Evolution of the Canary.

By J. W. CUTMORE (Liverpool).

Albinism is caused by a defect in the pulp of the feather preventing the entrance of the pigment. Melanism, the dark varieties, (the Black Bullfinches, etc.) is caused by too much pigment. Erythrism (red), when abnormal, is produced by the bird eating foods containing colour, as seen in colour-fed Canaries. The gloss which fanciers term quality or condition, is independent of the colour itself; it is the result of the horny surface of the feather being clean, smooth and polished.

Quite a New-Comer.

The Canary is comparatively of recent introduction into the ranks of domestic birds. The Canary, like pigeons and fowls, has under man's care and skill branched off into many different varieties, in the same way that the 200 varieties of pigeons all have come from one common stock—the Rock Dove—and that all our varieties of fowls have been evolved from the little Indian Jungle Fowl. Much progress has been made during the past 15 or 20 years. That all these varieties have been evolved from the little wild Canary (serinus canaria) is a splendid confirmation of the workings of evolution. The home of the Wild Canary, the origin of our domestic varieties, is in the Canary Islands, Madeira, and the Azores. As early as 1555 there is mention of "Canary Birds" from the Canary Islands and maybe the natives had domesticated the little Green Singing Finch many years before it was brought to Europe. In the 17th century it was freely imported from Germany, also seed from the Canary Islands, now called canary seed.

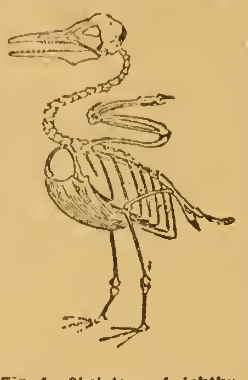

Fig 4.—Skeleton of Ichthyornis.

There have been many different versions given as to the origin of the present-day varieties of Canaries by men who could not understand or accept the great facts of evolution, but out of all these fancy notions of crosses with other Finches there is not one that will stand the test of careful examination; the nearest guess in this direction is a cross between the Canary Islands Canary and the Serin Finch. This Hybrid is certainly very Canarylike as we know him. He has a lightish throat, and is more cinnamon in his colouration. (I have a specimen of this cross on the table with the other specimens.) A cross with the Citril Finch has also been suggested as the origin of the Canary, but the beak of this bird is too pointed to allow this to pass. (I have specimens of this also here.)

How the Canary of To-day Originated.

In my opinion there is only one explanation as to the origin of our Canaries, and this is supported both by expert ornithologists and aviculturists; it is from the Wild Canary of the Canary Islands that all our present-day varieties have been evolved. I have here Wild Canaries (serins) from different parts of Africa, but not one compares so well with the present-day Green Canaries as the Canary Islands bird. The Canary has always shown a readiness to sport; it may be just by way of throwing a lightish variety, or a light feather or two, or the tendency to a crest or frill. We are all familiar with that very interesting sport, the pink-eyed Cinnamon, and who can judge what influence has come into play in the making of our later varieties from this source called by fanciers, "Cinnamon blood"? It would be interesting to go into this question of the Cinnamon qualities. I have taken very great interest in it during the past ten years, but there is not time to-night. The Cinnamon sport from Green Canaries, considered under the light of Mendel's laws of Heredity, is certainly very interesting and instructive. It is more, it is wonderful.

Heredity plays us funny tricks at times; frequently one hears of a champion produced from weeds, but more often vice-versa, weeds from a pair of champions; only recently a palace champion in Norwich Greens was thrown by a pair of weeds (rags, the owner called them). He put them together because no one would take them out of his room as a gift. Of course, such a result is more rare than an opposite one. It is more frequently that champions produce weeds. There is always a strong tendency towards reversion. Every breeder of Norwich Canaries knows full well how difficult it is to retain size in his birds, either in head or body, and this is a strong argument in favour of the original Canary being the little Serin Finch from the Canary Islands. Reversion is so soon affected, and frequently it is more quickly accomplished if remote types are paired together, but it is surely not so much as is suggested by Dr. Sharp in Allen's Natural History. Here is his statement: "Wild Canaries identical with the resident bird of the Canary Islands have been frequently caught in England. It seems quite feasible to suppose that escaped Canaries of the orthodox yellow colour would in a very short space of time revert to the plumage of the wild stock from which they were derived; and it is probably birds of this category which have been captured in England, rather than wanderers from the far distant home of the species." Surely this statement is open to question! Where would they have bred together, and how protected, and for how long? Would they be free from observation? Could they survive all the risks here for long enough to accomplish this? I fear not.

The Results of Careful Selection.

I think we can rest assured that the present-day interesting varieties of Canaries have all been produced by careful selection, the tendency of the Canary Finch to sport has been taken advantage of by men who have combined patience with the love of their hobby. Those clever mechanics, the French Huguenots, who came here during the persecutions in France, were said to be great Canary fanciers, keeping the birds in their workrooms. The tendency to sport may have been noticed quite accidentally, this suggesting the pairing of two such birds together, then by inbreeding the clear was ultimately produced (the uniformly yellow bird), other variations following. Many wild birds have a tendency to sport in the direction of albinism and cinnamon colouring. In the museum we have a large case containing many examples of both these varieties.

We have seen the results of evolution by artificial selection; we will now consider briefly Nature's method. Much could be said about the origin of species, but we must leave it out this evening and go to the rocks to study the origin of birds. Birds are said to have been evolved from reptiles. We do not like to think this of our up-to-date Canaries; the contrast seems to be so great between the mud-loving Crocodile of the Nile and the prettily formed, brightly coloured and intelligent birds of our hobby. Even our own dignity as Lords of Creation may be shaken when we consider and ask ourselves why that tail of ours is hiding itself away, and think of the remnant of hair on our bodies that suggests our one-time covering.

The Road We Travelled.

Not only have we come up through the ages on the monkey road, but we have also passed through the reptilian valley, up from the animalcule swamp. Our life begins as an ambiguous speck of matter which can in no way be distinguished from the original form of the lowest animal or plant. It next becomes a cell; the life of the animalcule is precisely the same. Cells cluster round this primordial cell, and the man is so far advanced that he might be mistaken for an undeveloped oyster. He grows still more, and it is clear that he might even be a fish. He then passes into a stage which is common to all quadrupeds, and next assumes a form which can only belong to quadrupeds of the higher type. At last the hour of birth approaches. Coiled within the dark womb he sits, the image of an ape, a caricature and a prophecy of the man that is to be. He is born; first he crawls, then he walks. The most experienced observer, with the aid of the best microscope, could not have declared at the beginning whether he was going to be man or plant. The Canary has had its animalcule and its reptile days, and whether it appears strange or not, we must endeavour to accustom our minds to the fact which is now so firmly established, and will never be overthrown.

Birds in the Long Ago.

Birds have not broken off from any existing reptile; the branching off came during the Jurassic period, the period of Dinosaurus, etc. Our old teacher used to advise us to use as a memoriser the words "dying of sores," for this period. As we trace the history of birds back in time, we find their remains, sometimes in great abundance, throughout the whole extent of the tertiary rocks, but, so far as our present knowledge goes, the birds of the tertiary period possessed the same essential characters as the birds of the present day. They were as much separated from reptiles as existing birds are. Not very long ago no remains of birds had been found below the tertiary rocks, but some few years ago such were discovered in England, although so imperfect that it could not be decided whether or not they differed from existing birds in any essential character. The Cretaceous rocks (chalk) of Western America have produced a bird named the Hesperornis, the skeleton of which corresponds with our Divers and Grebes, but Hesperornis differs from all birds, and resembles reptiles, in one important particular, it is provided with teeth.

The same formation has yielded another bird, Ichthyornis, the Fish bird (see Fig. 4), which also possesses teeth—the teeth are situated in distinct sockets, while those of Hesperornis are not so lodged. The Hesperornis had such small wings that it must have been a swimmer and diver like the Penguin, while the Ichthyornis had strong wings. Rocks older than those containing these two birds, the Solenhofen slates, have yielded the Archœopteryx (the Lizard-tailed bird), the existence of which was first made known by the finding of a fossil feather, or rather the impression of one. It is wonderful enough that such a perishable thing as a feather should leave its traces, and nothing more should be discovered, yet for a long time nothing was known of this bird except its feather. By and by a skeleton was discovered which is now in the British Museum, and we have a copy of it in Liverpool Museum. The feet are not only altogether birdlike, but have the special characters of the feet of perching birds; the body had a clothing of true feathers. Nevertheless, in some other respects Archœopteryx is unlike a bird, and like a reptile. There is a long tail composed of many vertebrae. The structure of the wing differs in some very remarkable respects from that of a present-day bird; it has a thumb and two fingers at the end of the wing. (The only bird of the present day anything like this is the young of the Hoatzin, which shows claws on its wings.) In the Archœopteryx we have an animal which to a certain extent occupies a midway place between a bird and a reptile—it had claws like a reptile and feathers like a bird, with a long reptile-like tail, with a fringe of feathers on each side.

Reptiles which Flew.

It is not proved that the transition from reptile to the bird has been effected by such a form as Archœopteryx, it only more or less suggests the nature of the steps by which the transition from one group to the other was effected.

There is another series of extinct reptiles, which combine some of the characters of both these groups, and which, as they possessed the power of flight, may seem at first sight to indicate the form by which the transition from the reptile to the bird was effected, the Pterodactyles. (See Fig. 5). These remains are found in the Mesozoic rocks, from the lias to the chalk. The animals had horny beaks, their bones contained air cavities, rendering them light, as in birds, they had claws and wings like bats. They were reptiles which had become modified in such a manner as to enable them to fly; they had, so to speak, gone on to the line which leads directly from reptiles to birds. Mr. Cutmore here concluded, and expressed his willingness to answer any questions; an interesting discussion followed.

At a meeting held April 16 at the Library Hall, Church St., Stoke Newington, Mr. John Robson gave a lecture on "Causes of Failure in Breeding." Commencing with cages, he said he considered rough boxes which novices sometimes make use of to save time and expense, were not advisable, as they made a natural harbour for red mite, etc., and once this pest put in an appearance, it was a difficult matter to get rid of it. The cause of not breeding any young birds is very often the owner's fault through pairing up when both birds are not in condition, some breeders feeding one sex or the other too much, whereas it is essential that both be in tip-top form before being paired up. Cold, frosty nights and mild days are often the cause of egg-binding and broken eggeries, and on these occasions a little heat put on at bed-time and turned off first thing in the morning is advisable. This weather will also often cause a hen to desert eggs and stop broodiness. Over fatness should be avoided, this being the cause of unfertile eggs, or perhaps one egg will be laid, of which no notice is taken. Birds in this condition should be turned into a flight cage with a few spiteful birds which will enforce exercise and also reduce to normal condition. Shell-less eggs are a very troublesome complaint to overcome, and in some instances there is no remedy. Where it is caused through the oviduct being unhealthy, a teaspoonful of limewater in a drinker should be tried.

Youth and Reliability.

Many fanciers have a craze for breeding with young birds, but over-year cock birds are more reliable, as in some cases the first clutch by a young bird proves unfertile, through the cock bird not being fully developed. This may be the case throughout the whole of the first season, but the following the same bird would be most reliable. Old birds are usually fit for pairing about the middle of March, but young birds should not be paired up before the middle of April, as they are not always fully developed until then. Overcrowding, by having too many pairs is also the cause of many failures, as it causes too much excitement, which results in addled eggs, or cock birds tearing out nests, etc.

Young birds are sometimes kept in the hope of better development by the next season. In this case they should be taken out of breeding-room to prevent disturbance by calling, and placed in a bright and dry room, free from draught. The breeding-room should be kept as quiet as possible. Except in cases where the breeder's means are limited, and he cannot procure a good stock, the cause of not breeding good young birds is often the owner's fault, through having a craze for a particular point, such as size, quality of feather, or colour, with the result, they obtain their object, but other qualities are lost, and lose ground. What is required are good all-round birds. No matter what variety you are interested in, you should make yourselves familiar with all the points. Breeders of Norwich often rely too much on size, and trust too much to green blood. When green blood is introduced, great care should be used to obtain the correct colour and quality.

Young Birds and their Diet.

What is required is the bronze green, the smoky variety containing too much black pigment to be of any use. The same remarks apply to Yorkshires. On no account sacrifice other qualities for size. Losing young after they can do for themselves (very often the pick of the room) is often caused by an error in feeding. Mr. John Robson stated he had made a close study of diet, and had come to the conclusion that the trouble was caused by getting young birds on to hard seed too quickly. This should not be done until they are well in the moult. Soaked, boiled, or scalded seed, the former for preference, he had found beneficial. German Rape soaked from 48 to 50 hours should be given, in addition to egg-food and crushed hemp. Two basins could be kept, so that you always had some by you. The digestive organs are unable to stand the strain of hard seed, and if given too young, the intestines, etc., become irritated, and the birds go off. From one to one and a-half teaspoonful of soaked rape to be given. After seed has been soaked for stated time, wash at tap and dry in a cloth to prevent diarrhœa, and give in a separate vessel. Instead of egg-food give bread and milk twice a week, which will prevent birds getting puffy. Do not overcrowd young birds together, not even in large flights, as at the age of six to eight weeks they have not the stamina to stand the strain of so much exercise, and overcrowding will also cause plucking.

The Discussion.

After the lecture some questions were asked and answered as follows:—

Mr. F. J. Castell: How many birds for a teaspoonful of soaked rape?—A good one to four birds. Lecturer also advised members to change the water once or twice while seed was soaking.

Mr. W. C. Penton: Do you mix anything with it to absorb moisture?—No; the process of rubbing dry in cloth was sufficient.

Mr. H. Neighbour: How long will seed last in soak?—It will keep fresh for a week providing water is changed now and again, and birds will enjoy it more.

Do you believe in lime-water?—Only when there is a tendency to diarrhoea, when a little dandelion juice should be added, but if attack is acute should prefer chlorodyne, say 5 or 6 drops in drinker, shake bottle well to prevent settlement.

Mr. Penton: Will birds take chlorodyne?—Yes, if not at once, they will when thirsty.

Mr. Castell: At what age do you allow young birds water?—Immediately they leave parents, when they also appreciate a bath.

Mr. E. T. Bush: How would you induce a hen to feed? Would sugar added to egg-food have any effect?—If the hen is in bad health remove young, but if only restless through being too forward give salts (enough to make water taste) to her for two days. If suddenly unwell through overcharge of green-food and not being relieved of same by young, give two drops castor oil and one drop of buckthorn to make oil work. The addition of sugar would have no effect.

Has bone-meal any advantage in frame-building?—Will only assist in reaching normal size.

Mr. A. J. Marley: Is there any cause for hen throwing a particular youngster out of nest continually?—When it appears to be the same one each time it is probably only a weak one, and is caused by its being huddled up in the feathers of the hen and falling out when hen is leaving nest. A change of diet has a tendency to improve matters. Or it may be caused through perches being above the nest pan, and the hens flying straight on to them from nest. Perches should be below nest, when hen will rise, hop on to the edge, and then on to perch.

Mr. Castell: Do you keep to the same green-food throughout the season?—As long as possible, and prefer watercress until seedy, then give young lettuce.

Mr. W. H. Ayling: Does watercress contain more iron than other green-food?—Yes.

Only Seeding Green-food.

Mr. R. P. Harper: Do you give green-food to young after leaving parents?—Only seedy chickweed and seedheads of grass, no leaves. This keeps them busy, and will prevent plucking. Neither will it cause diarrhoea. Do you give green-food during moult?—Not if colour feeding.

Mr. D. Inglis: Do you believe in dandelion leaves?—Only early in the season.

Mr. T. Collins: Is cod liver oil food mixed with ordinary egg food too heating at start of moult?—Yes, the weather being too warm and the food of too heavy a nature.

Mr. G. T. Green: Could you explain birds going soft owing to a slight change in temperature?—It is through moisture after a damp season, and the best cure is 5 drops tincture of quinine.

Mr. Castell: Does the use of split groats keep chill away?—I prefer a good sprinkling of maw seed, but mix split groats with egg food when young are feeding themselves.

Mr. Penton: Do you advocate soaked rape for young in nest?—Only if hens are troublesome and are not feeding.

Mr. Marley: What is the cause of sweating hens?—I do not believe there is any such thing, but it is weakness, or the young having diarrhoea, which makes the nest moist. At what age is a Canary fully developed?—Not really until the second moult. The frame is developed in two months, but the bird will fill out until above stated time.

Dr. Huggins: What quantity of rape do you give when feeding young?—Half-teaspoonful, the same with hemp, unless there are five young, when quantity is increased. Egg-food, two parts egg, one biscuit.

Mrs. Salter: Is it possible to breed white Canaries from a yellow and buff?—No. What is the longest period between pairing and fertilised eggs?—Four and six weeks have been known, after separation, but it is exceptional.

Mr. E. Stephens: In Mule breeding is it advisable to have first clutch by a Canary?—Yes, but let hen rear young alone.

Mr. Harper: What is the best diet for Hybrids?—Wild seeds and ordinary mixture.

Mr. T. D. Jackson: Is thunder, lightning, east wind, or any other weather the direct cause of clear eggs, chicks dead in shell, or hens refusing to feed?—Thunder and lightning have no effect whatever, the nest not being in contact with the ground, but, of course, if nest is struck the result is probably fatal. East winds are harmful, especially if the embryo is not strong, and will take the stamina out of old birds. Is it possible to breed a yellow from two buffs? If not, why not?—I have heard of it being done, but think it is supposition, as I do not believe it possible. I am not prepared to say why not, but it may be there is not sufficient pigment, as it is much weaker in two buffs than two yellows.

The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the lecturer.—P. N. Jeffries, Hon. Sec.

BLACKBURN.

Open contest for quality Linnet singing will be held at club headquarters, Empire Hotel, Bolton-road, May 10, when several good prizes will be given. Hoping to see old and new friends.—T. Hayhurst, Sec.

LEADGATE.

Linnet sing held at Sportsman's Arms, April 26, when 26 birds entered: 1, Bentick; 2, Putler. Next contest May 10, when £2 will be given; entrance 1/-, 3d. refreshment at the same house.—W. Atkinson, Sec.

WESTHOUGHTON.

Open contest for time held Horse Shoe Inn, Wingates, April 19, when some good singing was heard before a large company: 1, Knowles; 2, 3, Fairhurst. Open contest for time will be held May 10th, when we hope to see a good muster of Linnet fanciers.—J. Woodward.

CASTLEFORD.

Weekly Linnet contest held April 26th; 48 birds entered for four good prizes. 1, Nelson, 60; 2, Parnell, 58; 3, Smith, 52; 4, Brindley, 49. Also April 27th, 31 birds were entered for three good prizes given by Mr. L. Parker. 1, Nelson, 56; 2, Brindley, 54; 3, Archdale, 52.—Walter Dobson.

WEST HARTLEPOOL.

Linnet singing contest held at the Shakespeare Hotel, April 19; 23 birds sang for three good prizes. 1, 2, Appleton; 3, Guthrie. Also April 26, 39 birds sang for three good prizes. Some of the best singing took place that has been heard in the district. 1, Guthrie; 2, 3, Harrison. An open contest takes place May 1; first pair on the nail at 2. Members please roll up with your subs., as the big singing is soon coming on.—M. Devine.

DALTON-LE-DALE.

Linnet contest held at Times Inn, Dalton-le-Dale, April 26th; 42 birds competed. 1, 3, Hills; 2, Davidson; 4, The King; 5, Briggs; 6, Hartley. Next singing held at Station Hotel, Seaham Harbour. 10s. added to entrance fees, first bird on nail at 1; entry, 6d. a bird. A match to follow by Hills and The King, two minutes up, all proud singing. A match was sung at Murton on April 27th between The King and George Coulson for £1 a-side, when The King won.—R. Elliott.

LEEDS.

Weekly contest for quality Linnet singing, held at the Old Bird House, King's Head, Shannon Street, Leeds, April 26th. 20 birds sang for four good prizes given by Mr. Wm. Tillotson: 1, Stead; 2, 3, shared by Butler and Wigfield; 4, Wigfield. Judges: D. Madden, Lacy, Naylor. Also April 27, thirty-one of the best birds in Yorkshire sang for four good prizes: 1, Bland; 2, Sissons; 3, Butler; 4, Grant. Judges, Crane, Lacy, Naylor.—Walter Naylor, Hon. Sec.

Weekly Linnet singing contests for quality, held at Skinner's Arms, Buslingthorpe Lane, April 26th; twenty-seven of the best birds in Leeds sang for four good prizes given by Mr. A. Fishwick. Some very good singing was heard to the enjoyment of a crowded house: 1, Ward; 2, Sellers; 3, 4, shared between Sellers and Hayes. Judges: J. Dalton and G. Clayton. Also April 27th, 36 birds faced the judges, who gave every satisfaction before a crowded company, and some delightful singing was heard: 1, Ward; 2, Sellers; 3, 4, Green. Judges: T. C. Summers and C. Clayton.—T. C. Summers, Hon. Sec.

Contest for quality singing Linnets held at Prince Albert Hotel, Newtown, April 27; 33 birds sang for four good prizes. 1, Soloman; 2, Towers; 3, Playforth. E. Wood and A. Lorriman shared 4th. Judges, C. Lorriman, A. Binns, and A. Turner.—A. Lorriman.

KIPPAX.

Members singing held at headquarters, Commercial Hotel, April 26; 27 birds sang for three good prizes: 1, sp, Potter, 63; 2, Collison, 41; 3, Walks, 35. Members' sing, May 3. General meeting will be held after sing.—A. Tomlin, Sec.

PELTON.

Linnet contest held at Engine Hotel, Pelton, Saturday, April 26; 42 birds entered, and some good time was done. After some hard fighting, a division was made between Black and Tan and Bellringer (Brady and McQuirk). Next contest May 3, Half-Way House, Witton Gilbert; 10s. added to entrance, 6d. a bird. This house is near Durham, and a champion house for birds. First bird on nail at 2 p.m. [We cannot insert further reports of contests unless authenticated by the name and address of the sender.—Ed.]

PONTEFRACT.

Weekly club contest at Woodman Inn; 32 birds sang for four good prizes. All the old veterans were highly pleased when Mr. W. Proctor was first after three years of hard study. 1, 4, Proctor, 86, 41; 2, Piper, 64; 3, Nelson, 48. Also April 27, 32 birds sang for four good prizes. 1, Proctor, 60; 2, 4, Piper, 66, 50; 3, Nelson, 60. Will all committee members please attend the meeting after contest on May 3rd. Don't forget our big Whitsuntide contest; all prizes will be on view on Whit Monday morning before contest. First bird hung at 1.—W. Beard, Sec.

LEIGH.

The Globe Inn Linnet Club held a singing contest open to all England for time and quality, April 26. Some very good singing was heard by a crowded room. Quality: 1, Jones; 2, Green; 3, Brown; 4, Barnes. Time: 1, Bate (107); 2, Poole (95); 3, Statham (80); 4, Fairhurst (74). Judges for quality were: W. Barnes, J. W. Jones, Ben Jones; for time: R. Holcroft, T. Statham. Minuteman, E. Tatum; birdman, H. Fairhurst. After the contest there was a match between Mr. Poole and Mr. Lunn, two minutes' face on singing, Mr. Poole winning easily. Also a match between J. Bate and T. Statham, one minute without screen, and one minute with screen, T. Statham winning. Another match was then sung, between W. Holmes and D. Banks, one minute face on; W. Holmes won. After the matches a jovial evening followed, ending with songs by J. Bate and F. Statham, and a few more artists of Linnet clubs. E. Higman (Pendlebury) accompanied. There will be no club contest May 3. We are postponing it for another date. I will send postcards to all outside members. Monthly meeting May 2, at 7.30.—R. Holcroft, Sec.

Club Reports.

GLOBE INN ROLLER CLUB.

I am requested to call another general meeting of members and intended members for May 10, at 7.30 at the Globe Inn, Bradshawgate, Leigh, when some very important business will be gone through. Members will kindly note that this is the night when further payments are required, according to the Pro. Rule. Hoping that the meeting will meet with success, as there are inquiries as to the financial position of the society. Will members do their best to attend and bring along with them as many new members as possible. J. McAllister, Sec. pro tem.

STOKE C.B.A.

When it was suggested and decided to promote an essay competition amongst members, I quite expected that most would participate, and I must confess that I am somewhat disappointed that more have not done so. I feel sure that most of the older members are quite capable of writing on some subject connected with the Fancy, which would have been both interesting and instructive to all present at the reading of same. However, we are much indebted to those gentlemen who have taken the trouble to write for us the papers we shall hear read on Monday evening next. These are three in number, and all touch on different subjects, and it will probably add to the interest of the meeting if we have a short discussion on each paper. I think the papers all good ones, and the shortest will probably arouse much interest and provide food for thought. Meeting 8.30 p.m.. I hope all members will make an effort to be present.—J. Pitchford, Hon. Sec.

SCOTTISH PLAINHEAD CLUB.

Committee meeting held in Good Templar's Hall, 122, Ingram Street, Glasgow, April 26, Mr. Aitchison, president in the chair, others present being E. Barron, W. Bishop, J. McLay and A. Sloan. Pres. W. Aitchison was re-elected; vice-pres. elected, Messrs. J. Young, E. Barron, J. Hector, G. Mitchell, A. G. Cameron. Mr. Barron brought forward his scheme for cup, bowl and novice prize competitions, the two former to be won three times before becoming the property of any one, and the novice prize to be won outright. The matter was fully discussed and it was decided that with a few alterations Mr. Barron's scheme be adopted. The conditions of competition and other particulars will be printed and sent to every member before the first patronage show. Mr. Barron undertook to raise the necessary funds for the purchase of the trophies amongst the members and friends, with the co-operation and assistance of the secretary. The members present having expressed their willingness to give the closed ring a trial this year, the secretary was instructed to purchase 200 rings now with the view of selling them to any of the members desirous of adopting them. Of course, it must be distinctly understood that members are under no compulsion to use the rings. The following were elected members: C. Barrie, Haddington; J. Gallagher, Bellshill; A. H. M'Lean, Bonhill, and A. Crawford, Glasgow. The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chairman. Will members please note that subscriptions are now due. Prospective members can have all particulars from the secretary, J. Brown, 599, Duke Street, Glasgow.

IMPORTANT BUSINESS AT THE ANNUAL MEETING.

Annual general meeting held March 1. Mr. James Winter, President, in the chair. Financial statement for the year was submitted. Having been considered by the members, and Mr. J. F. Dewar giving auditor's report as to the satisfactory condition of books, it was unanimously approved of. Votes of thanks being cordially given to all those who had assisted at show; to Miss Peddie Waddell for the care and attention she bestowed on the foreign exhibits, to Messrs. Sykes and Hoyle in the British Section; to Hon. Prov. Committee, Committee of Management, and auditors, brought one of the best years in the history of the Society to a close. It being agreed to hold another show, the dates were fixed for Dec. 31 and Jan. 1. Office-bearers appointed for next year: Hon. Pres., Prof. J. C. Stewart, Edinburgh University; Hon. Vice-Pres., Messrs. A. Lawrie, J.P., Councillor A. Stevenson, J. Brown, A. C. Dandie, Edinburgh; and Treas., F. A. Watt, Banff. Hon. Provincial Committee: Dr. Galloway, Aberdeen; Messrs. R. Jamieson, Junr., Linlithgow; P. McQuiston, Ayr; G. Mitchell, Brechin; P. Arnott, Alloa; J. Young, Rutherglen; W. Bishop, Sterling; T. Adamson, Kirkcaldy; M. Jamieson, Hawick; J. D. Richardson, Dumfries; T. Erskine, Glasgow; H. Bennet, Kelso; R. Bald, Bathgate; and J. Patterson, Chirnside. Pres., Mr. Jas. Winter, Edinburgh; Vice-Pres., Mr. S. Buglas, Edinburgh; show manager, Mr. R. Craig, Edinburgh; sec. and treas., J. R. Meikle, 51, Lothian Road, Edinburgh; Acting Committee: Messrs. A. Rodger, W. R. Finnie, T. Todd, J. G. Easter, J. Holmes, J. Gourlay, J. Nelson, S. May, R. S. Spence, W. Turnbull, D. Morris, J. B. Cooper, J. Hutchison, J. Stormont, and J. Charlton, Edinburgh; W. Carson, G. W. Brown, P. Murray, Leith; A. Hoyle, A. Moffat, Musselburgh; and W. B. Smart, Loanhead. Auditors, Messrs. J. F. Dewar and P. Green, Edinburgh.

Adjourned general meeting, March 22, the President again presiding over a splendid gathering of members. List of judges as drawn up by Committee was submitted for consideration. They were approved of, and are as follows: Norwich section, Mr. J. Trengove, Rishton; Crests, Mr. J. Young, Rutherglen; Belgians, Mr. J. F. Dewar, Edinburgh; Border Fancy section, Mr. T. Arnot, Hawick; and Mr. W. Mossie, Annanbank; variety section, Mr. W. Mundell, Bradford; Mules and Hybrids, Mr. J. Maddison, Newcastle-on-Tyne; British section, Mr. Crossley Sykes, Musselburgh; Foreign section, Mr. L. J. Arrighi, Edinburgh. All the above have accepted the position. Names of Scotch Fancy and Roller Judges will be issued at an early date. Prize money as usual—15s., 10s., 5s., 3s., 2s. Prize cards, 1st to 5th inclusive, cost price 6d. each. Re proposal of Edinburgh Open Society anent joint show—"Proposed by the Special Committee appointed by Edinburgh Ornithological Society to ask the Scottish National C.B.S. to give the Edinburgh Society members a full classification for the Scotch Fancy at the Scottish National New Year Show, and that the Edinburgh Society be allowed to appoint a committee from their members to work jointly with the officials of the Scottish National Society and to attend to the Scotch Fancy Sections at the show, the Scotch Fancy members to do all in their power to further the interests of the Societies. The Edinburgh Society to change the date of their show from the New Year to a suitable date in the end of November." This proposal was fully gone into by the special committees of both societies at meeting on March 17th, when it was agreed to add to above—"to provide and allocate their own specials, and to appoint four gentlemen to act as judges for the Scotch Fancy, the names to be submitted to a general meeting of the Scottish National C.B.S. for approval." Both Societies have adopted the recommendations of the Committees. Members of Scotch Fancy Committee are: Messrs. W. Allan, R. Lile, P. McNiven, A. Paterson, Edinburgh; J. Sinclair, M. Petrie, Leith. Now that this matter has been settled in so friendly a manner, it is sincerely hoped that the Scotch Fancy exhibitors will do all they can not only to make their section a great attraction, but also an assured financial success. Classification: Norwich, 19 classes (3 limit); Crest, 8 (2 limit); Scotch Fancy, 16 (1 breeding pairs (guaranteed) and 4 limit); Belgian, 3; Border Fancy, 19 (3 limit); two classes for Cinnamons have been added in this section, and one selling, Green or Cinnamon. This latter is guaranteed by Mr. T. Arnot, of Hawick. Cinnamon 2 classes, Yorkshire 12, A.O.V. Canary 1, Mules, 8 (1 limit); British, 20 (1 limit); Roller and Foreign classes notified at an early date. It has been decided to again add a gift class. The Committee desire to thank the exhibitors for the grand support they gave last show, and express the wish that all classes of fanciers will rally round them to make their next venture the greatest success of all.—J. R. Meikle, Sec.

Meeting held April 28, at the Church Institute, 60 Paddington Street, Mr. V. Wynn, Hon. Sec., and 32 members being present. Mr. W. A. Shepherd, Chairman, presided, and received the congratulations of members on his recovery from a severe attack of influenza. Letters were read from Mr. F. Knight and Mr. G. E. Weston. Mr. Birch, of the London Federation, wrote stating the Council would now consist of the Chairman and Sec. of each affiliated society, and would meet only as a court of appeal and to settle disputes; the yearly subscription to be 2s. 6d. This Association had resolved at a previous meeting to continue membership for another year. A letter was read from Mr. Martin offering 10s. 6d. to member paying in most ticket money for the proposed concert, and a silver and bronze medal to members paying in 2nd and 3rd most money. This handsome offer was gratefully accepted. Mr. J. Taylor was elected a member. The Hon. Sec. was requested to convey to Mr. Lathbury the hearty thanks of members for his offer of a special value 10s. 6d. The compiling of young bird show schedule was left in the hands of Hon. Sec. It was announced that the annual outing would take place on Saturday, May 24th, in conjunction with the British Bird and Mule Club, the destination being Epping Forest. Mr. T. C. Mann was nominated for membership. A judging competition of British birds was then held. Thirty birds were staged in 4 classes, Goldfinch 11, Linnet 6, Greenfinch 5, Redpoll, Siskin or Twite 8. Our esteemed member, Mr. C. Prior, acted as final judge, and at completion of judging very lucidly explained his reasons for awarding the cards. Owing to the lateness of the hour very few questions could be put, and what would have been a very interesting discussion was curtailed. If members would endeavour to be a little more punctual in their attendance it would greatly facilitate the commencement of business. A very hearty vote of thanks was unanimously given to Mr. C. Prior for his kind services, and the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to Chairman.—Fred Thynne, Asst. Hon. Sec.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

General meeting held at headquarters, Oldham Hall, April 24th, Mr. Metcalfe in the chair. There was a good attendance, and business was promptly put through. It was arranged for style of patronage in champion section to be as before, namely, four classes in Green Yorks., Nor. 3, and Bord., one or more sections, as required; will societies please apply early? Annual subs. reduced to 2s. 6d. Old members may rejoin if subscription be paid within the next six months. A novice scheme was brought forward by Messrs. Deacon and Lloyd, and well received by all present. Will societies please note rules governing novice scheme, cup, medals, etc., to be competed for by G.C.A. members (novices), at either open or members' shows, within twenty miles' radius of Liverpool. Competitors must show at 50 per cent. of the shows to compete for same; two novice classes to be supplied for each section. Classification: Yorks., Greens, self or foul Yellow; ditto Buff; same for Norwich Greens, and Border Greens, form of patronage at all times to be decided by the G.C.A. Four highest birds to count points according to the rules of the society that gives us patronage. All points to count downwards. Exhibitors are allowed to count points in any one section. Partnership points to count as per Green Club rule. A novice remains a novice during next show season. The following prizes have been given for this novice competition: Silver cup, by our President Mr Deacon; gold medal, by Mr. Handley and Mr. Robinson, and other specials, including 10s., by Mr. Rawsthorne; £1 1s. was given by our chairman, J. W. Metcalfe. Entry fee for novice classes to be 1s. per entry; prize-money, 10s. each class, 5s., 3s., 2s. Will local societies please apply for patronage early? Rule: A novice is one who has not won a first in Green classes in open competition. The following members were nominated: S. Andrews, H. Abbott, W. Hayes, J. Blorr, W. Murray, Tomlinson, Lea, R. Jenkins, S. Woods, W. Young, Postalwaite, Longmoor, T. Evans, J. Handley, Bache, Mahon, Collier, Crowe, Howcroft, Greenhart, Wilson, Skilling, Brimsby. Everything points to a successful season. Applications to be addressed to F. Handley, 28, Coventry Road, Wavertree, Liverpool, Hon. Sec.

PLUMSTEAD & WOOLWICH C.B.S

On April 17 Mr. J. Robson gave a lecture on management of young stock and preparing for the exhibition bench. About 30 members and friends, including several ladies, were present, who took the hints as the lecturer steadily unfolded them, so as to be able to put them into practice when the birds are left to their care. Those members who were absent lost a treat. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer, and Mr. Robson suitably replied, and this brought to a close a very successful meeting.

STRATFORD & E. LONDON F.S.

Very successful evening show was held April 24. The entry totalled 150. The room was crowded all the evening, and several new members were booked. The society is open to Great Britain, and entries came from near and far. Distribution of prizes on May 8, Workman Hall. Special for best bird in show was awarded to a Goldfinch of Mr. G. A. Parker's. Mr. C. H. Cooper judged.

MANCHESTER AND NORTHERN COUNTIES O.S.

MR. CUTMORE ON "PEDIGREE BREEDING AND HEREDITY.

General meeting held at headquarters, The Deansgate Temperance Hotel, April 21; Mr. W. A. Bladon presided over a good muster. We soon got through the general business, having Mr. Cutmore, of Liverpool, with us, to give us a lecture entitled "Pedigree Breeding and Heredity." He first dealt upon the wild Canary, then treated upon the present varieties. He shewed us by diagrams how the Mendelian laws of heredity assist the breeder in selecting and producing qualities most required in his stock. The first diagram showed several generations of Canaries bred from one pair, illustrating that a strain can actually be produced from one good strong typical bird, using with it inferior stock, by a process of elimination and selection; this diagram was only to show what can be done. It would be better and quicker to start with a good pair. The second diagram illustrated that by the same law a strain of cinnamons could be produced from one cinnamon sport. Mr. Bladon doubted this, saying you must use the cinnamon on the cock side to do this. Mr. Raynes confirmed the suggestion, saying he had bred a cinnamon marked cock with cinnamon blood on the hen side. Different varieties of Canaries have been established by very much more rapid process than many people would imagine. With a very small selection and advantage in its favour, a rare sport would oust the normal form in a given number of generations. Diagram three showed that in three generations from a pair, i.e., clear cock x cinnamon hen, a strain of clears, a strain of greens, and a strain of cinnamons, as well as many variegated birds could be produced. Besides colour, size can be bred into stock in a similar manner. In selection, size will prove effective in first and second generations from a young stock, the mother's influence is about equal to that of the father. The fourth diagram showed how impure strains bred wasters, as in the Blue Andalusian fowls, and that to breed blues, black must be paired to white. When the blues are paired together about half of the chickens are blue, half are blacks and dirty whites. The Blue Andalusian is simply a mongrel of the black and white cross. The blacks, if paired, breed true; the whites also if paired breed true. Diagram No. 5 showed the same laws governing the colour in rats and mice, i.e., a brown and a white paired produce all brown progeny, but these again paired would produce brown with odd whites. Many questions were then asked Mr. Cutmore about inbreeding, the history of the Canary, etc. Time and trains wait for no man, and Mr. Cutmore having to go home to Liverpool, we had to bring the meeting to a close (otherwise we might have been there now). This was done with a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Cutmore for his most interesting and instructive lecture. Next meeting, Monday, May 5, when we will be entertained by Mr. J. Beswick, of Stockport, with a lecture on "British Birds and Mule Breeding." Those who know Mr. Beswick will not need asking twice to come. As for the others, we can assure them that they will hear something both useful and interesting. Friends cordially invited. The first annual ramble will take place on Sunday, May 4, train leaving Central Station at 9 o'clock a.m. for Ashley and Mobberley, when Mr. R. J. Metcalfe will conduct the party round Pickmere, etc. This is the only train, so I hope all intending going will not forget. We expect to hold another one shortly.—H. Boothman, Hon. Sec.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held April 17, at Maskell Hotel, Mr. Whetton presided over a rather small meeting. I trust that members will attend our next meeting as we have some important business in connection with our open show, re hall, etc., which will be dealt with. It is useless for a few members to try and carry on the business of the society. Please let us have your support at future meetings. I put myself to great inconvenience to attend the last meeting and was greatly disappointed. At next meeting we intend having questions written on slips and drawn for.—E. Thomas, Sec.

NORTHERN BORDER & S.F.C.C.

Monthly meeting, held April 7, Mr. W. Smith in the chair. Letters were read from Mr. W. F. Barr, accepting the presidentship, and from Mr. A. Parkin, accepting the office of vice-president. Mr. M. Cottar and Mr. G. W. Armstrong were elected members. The proposition that the Scotch Fancy members be left out of the club was then gone into. After a good deal of discussion an amendment was made that the Scotch members be allowed to stay in the club, as they were willing that no Scotch class be asked for at the patronage shows. The amendment was carried. Decided that the rules stand as last year. The classification required for shows receiving our patronage was proposed and carried as follows: Cl. or tkd. yell. ck.; ditto buff; yell. or buff mkd. cock or hen; cl. or tkd. hen; green or Cinnamon yell. cock; ditto buff; ditto yellow or buff hen; novice any colour cock; ditto hen.—M. C. Potts, Sec.

NORTH WALES C.B.S.

Committee meeting held on April 24, at Assembly Rooms, Market Street, Carnarvon. Present: Mr. James Jones, chairman; vice-chairman, Mr. George Jones; Messrs. J. W. Jones, John Pritchard, Edward Jones, and R. E. Griffith, hon. sec. In the matter of judges' fees, eleven judges stated their terms. Mr. John Kershaw, late Llanrwst, was elected to judge members' show, July 5th, with the following classes: 2 Borders, 3 Yorks., 3 Nor., 1 Nat. Col., 2 Mules or Hyb., 2 Goldfinches (British), Linnet, Siskin, Redpoll, or Twite, British A.O.V.: Foreign, single or pairs; selling class, 10/6; 2 novice (British and Canary), and a challenge cup class. Prizes: 5/-, 2/6, 1/-; novice prizes, 3/-, 1/6, 9d.; specials in every class. To become a member of the N.W.C.B.S. just forward your name and address, with p.o. for 1/-, at an early date. I want this to be a record year for members and entrance fee is only 9d. to win 5/-, and a special prize, and perhaps the challenge cup. The committee have again decided to have a class for the challenge cup, to be won by points, with Canaries bred 1913, and not nominating two birds, as published in my last report in CAGE BIRDS. The secretary will give medal for second most points in the cup class. The membership cards are now ready. We have enrolled six new members, and I hope others will join at an early date, and not leave it till later, as the sooner members join the better it will be in the end. The committee are a hard working lot. There are 20 classes for the members' show, with a special Welsh judge, and good money prizes and specials, the best ever been at any members' show yet. Next meeting on Thursday at above rooms, at 7 p.m. prompt; show business.—R. E. Griffith, Hon. Sec.

YORKS. COUNTIES B.B. & M.C.

Meeting held in Market Tavern, Bradford, April 26, W. A. Cowgill, Esq., in the chair, on behalf of Mr. M. A. Wilson (president). Letters and applications were read asking for the patronage, and this was allotted to the following: Sheffield O.S., Bradford Nat., Malton, and Halifax, these being the only societies applying for same up to date. The following new members were nominated, making seven new members in two meetings:—Messrs. J. C. Chambers, Leeds; E. Hattersley, Leeds; J. Owen, Leeds, and Fairhurst, Manchester. Mr. Fairhurst's name was added to the committee of outside Bradford District. A letter from Mr. S. Dean, resigning from the club was received with regret. The question arose as to the number of shows being allotted the patronage, but was left over till the next meeting. It was proposed by Mr. H. J. Chittenden that the Club's name be altered from the present one to Yorkshire and Lancashire British Bird and Mule Club, seconded by Mr. T. H. Inman. Will all secretaries of the different societies in Lancashire please apply for the Club's patronage before the end of May, and also all intending members send in their names so that same can be in the new books. Subscription 2s. 6d., exhibiting members; 1s. honorary members, per year. The secretary's position was filled by Mr. T. H. Inman, who said he would try the position for a year, which both pleased Mr. Lane and the present members very much. The balance sheet was passed round, after being audited and found correct, and it was seen that the Club is in a very good position, having just on £2 to go on with. It is to be hoped that plenty of members will join the club this year, and make it one of the most flourishing in England. There will be numerous prizes for competition both champion section and amateur, this season. Don't forget that the Club includes Lancashire. Members present were Messrs. F. Hammond, W. A. Cowgill, C. Ross, T. H. Inman, H. J. Chittenden, J. Isherwood, and the sec.—J. Lane, Hon. Sec.

CLAY CROSS C.B.S.

Meeting held at the Angel Hotel, April 23rd, Mr. Beesby presiding. We decided to hold first feather show June 7. Secretary was instructed to call upon members not attending and ask them to attend our next meeting. Considering that this is our first attempt, we are quite satisfied up to the present, but we invite anyone wishing to become a member. We have already 23 members, and a few more promised, and we hope all our members will make it convenient to attend our next meeting, May 7.—J. Griffiths, Sec.

ARBROATH C.B.S.

Mr. W. Muir (president) presided over a very large attendance eager to hear the interesting paper, "From Moulting to Show Bench," given by that well-known fancier, Mr. G. McArdle. Decided to have a members' F.F. show, July 12th. Next meeting, May 7th, when we are to have a grand smoker. It was arranged to have a bowling match between Canary fanciers and British and Foreign. Other minor matters having been considered, the meeting was brought to a close with a vote of thanks to Mr. McArdle for his interesting paper, and also to the chairman.—J. Gray, Sec.

ST. JAMES THE LESS F.A.

Meeting held at Mess Club, St. James's Road, Cambridge Heath, April 21st. Business in connection with the young stock show received attention, and also discussions upon pending evening shows. Mr. Goodchild, Dalston, and Mr. Barlow, Bethnal Green, were nominated for membership. The chairman, Rev. Carlos Stretch, gave an informal lecture upon his experience of animal life in the Australian bush, and the interest aroused infused further enthusiasm amongst the already enthusiastic members of this growing society. Committee meet May 5th, Reading Room, Men's Service Club, Ridley House.—Thos. G. Bransford, Hon. Sec.

OPEN NORWICH PLAINHEAD C.C.

Result of annual ballot for committee: A. Hirst, 32 votes (vice-chairman), H. J. Chittenden 31, F. Hammond 30, H. W. Battye 28, W. A. Cowgill 28, A. Humphries 28, H. Simonett 28, R. Halliday 27, G. Harland 25, A. H. Waters 25, S. Heap 23, H. Clegg 21, A. Haigh 21, O. Mitchell 21, Sam Wilcock 20, D. Hunter 20, Joe Thomas 19, J. Chambers 17, J. Mottram 17, A. Pickles 16, W. Johnson 16. 78 ballot forms were sent out, 42 returned. Societies desirous of the club's patronage should apply to me as early as possible, not later than May 10th. I intend to call above appointed committee together to allot same, on that date. Fanciers desirous of joining the club please send their names, etc., to me. Subscriptions now due.—F. Rhodes, Hon. Sec., 32, Barlow Street, Bradford.

ATTERCLIFFE C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held at headquarters, Horse and Jockey Hotel, Attercliffe, president (Mr. Havenhand) in the chair. After the usual society business was gone through, we held a discussion re coming nest feather show. It was finally decided to hold it at the Attercliffe Vestry Hall, and have an afternoon show only. The judge was nominated, also awards from society re prize money. Several gentlemen have kindly consented to give specials, so we are looking forward to it proving a success. We finished up the evening by holding a "Questions and Answers" discussion, several mooted points re pairing, etc., being threshed out to the satisfaction of the dubious members. We have decided at a committee meeting to hold our next monthly meeting a week later than usual, and hope all members will do their utmost to attend, as there is very important business to be discussed.—W. Hailstone, Sec.

PROVINCIAL ROLLER C.S.

Monthly meeting, held April 26th, at the Old Boar's Head, Corporation Street, Manchester. Mr. Wareing was in the chair. He expressed the pleasure it afforded him to preside over such a good attendance of members, and regretted that business was the cause of the absence of some of our old members, whose opinions are highly valued in the discussions frequently arising. He welcomed as new members: Messrs. G. C. Prescott, Hulme; J. Harrison, Nelson; J. Heatherley, Rugeley, Staffs; R. S. Haley, Heely, Sheffield; and H. Hawksford, Shaw. Congratulations to Mr. Groves, winner of novice points competition cup. Mr. F. J. Randall and Mr. T. Turner tied for champion points competition cup; both gentlemen readily agreed to the terms of a proposal advanced, and an amicable settlement resulted. The society thanks Mr. Pericles as donor of two 10s. special prizes, to be given at our next two shows—members' and open. Correspondence was read by a member that had arisen through an unfortunate occurrence happening during a transaction in purchasing fresh stock. It was ultimately decided that the matter was out of the society's jurisdiction. This matter showed vividly the value of using Cage Birds' deposit system, which is more economic than for societies to form funds for the protection of their members. Patronage will be given to Bradford Show. Will fanciers and societies kindly note that our annual open show is fixed for January 9 and 10, 1914?—J. Tomlinson.

ARDWICK & MANCHESTER C.B.S

LECTURE BY MR. HARRISON, ALTRINCHAM.

Meeting and lecture held in the St. Thomas's School, Ardwick, a good number of members being present; Mr. R. Booth in the chair. Usual business was gone through previous to lecture, including the making of five new members, also the electing of Mr. Harrison to judge first feather show. Mr. Harrison, in opening his lecture, stated he would lay a few facts before us and hoped we would have a good discussion, so that we could all benefit by it. He stated he did not intend to stick to one variety, but would touch on several, those mentioned being Norwich, Yorkshire, and Borders. In opening with the Norwich, he stated we must have birds, not pedigree, because no matter how good we got the birds they would not breed all winners, and a good deal depended on the pairing up. He had found that a small hen was not to be despised, as such birds made the best of mothers, but colour must play a prominent part in stock birds. In selecting a pair he would choose a cock with marked wings, as he thought the good coloured birds caught the judge's eye, that was why he advised us to breed for colour, as well as feed for colour. He advised us to take greater care in selecting hens, as he believed we get more good birds from hens than cocks. After describing his ideal pair for breeding, he advised us to breed forward, not remain stationary. Regarding breeding for size, this was a thing he had done a lot of experimenting with, as all fanciers had a certain theory, but he believed it increased both size and feather, and we must pair close feathered birds together. He did not care for hens from double buffing or cocks from double yellowing. He had found the best way was to select cocks from double buff and hens from double yellowing. This method the lecturer had found to be very successful; in fact, he had bred several grand birds from same, including a diploma winner at the Palace show in 1911 When breeding Yorkshires he liked hens to be of the best, free from any loose feathers, neck not too long, body long with neat waist, tail long and proportionately well packed, about 6¾ inches. He thought the breeders of to-day paid too much attention to the cock birds. All the same, he liked the cocks that had swankey movements and position erect, size about 6¾ to 7 inches. Buffing he did not think was beneficial to Yorkshires. As they were a bird of style, he strongly advised us not to be tempted to use dumpy hens. In Borders he preferred to breed with show specimens, as this was a breed in which we did not want to increase size, but they must not have any loose feather, as no advantage would be gained, as this bird was naturally stylish, jaunty, and of nippy movements and carriage. No bird he thought more resembled the wild Canary than this bird, but he strongly advised us that head was a most vital point in this breed, back to be well filled and nicely rounded; in fact, we must have a nice even bird altogether. Here the lecturer gave us a few good hints in washing and staging birds, as he thought this was one of the most important events in a bird's life, the lecturer finished by stating he would be pleased to answer any questions. Several members tested the lecturer with important questions regarding their pets, but all were answered with credit. The meeting came to a close after a vote of thanks had been given the lecturer, proposed by our worthy president (Dr. Twigg), and seconded in an able manner by Mr. Robinson, to which the lecturer replied in his usual style.—R. Booth, Press Correspondent.

DERWENT VALLEY C.B.S.

Meeting held April 26th, in the Church Hall, Hamsterley, Mr. Geo. Barkas in the chair; only a moderate attendance of members. A little business in regard to our first feather show was gone into. Would members and all intending members try to get to our next meeting, and let us get things put right for our first feather show?—E. Jameson.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Meeting held April 26, Mr. Waters presiding over a good attendance. Mr. Cornerton, East Herrington, was made a member. Decided to hold two nest feather shows this year, June 21, and July 19. Agreed to have one class for each variety. Entrance fee, 3d. per cage, birds staged by 6 p.m. Proposed to ask Mr. John Clark to judge both shows. Several members reported youngsters, so we are looking forward to two good shows. I shall be pleased to enrol any new member who would care to join us.—T. Davison, Sec., 16, East Wickham Street, Monkwearmouth.

LIVERPOOL FANCIERS' CYCLE CLUB.

Sunday's boisterous weather did not stop the boys from having a run out. Ten mounted lads braved the elements, and journeyed to Southport. The rain and wind were cruel, but the Liverpool Bhoys are not downhearted; they took it all in good spirits (at Charlie Robinson's). We made a good journey home, with not a sound in the dark except the "swish-swish" of the tyres, arriving home like birds that had been having a bath. All members meet at headquarters next Sunday, May 4th, at 2 p.m., for the Wirrall Circular run. Monthly meeting, May 7, Marlborough Cafe, 66, Dale Street, at 8 p.m. sharp; business important.—R. Malone, Hon. Sec.

WEST BROMWICH C.B.S.

Meeting held April 28, a fair number of members putting in an appearance. Date for first nest feather show fixed for June 17. Rule 19 in rule book was deleted, as on the season's working it was found too hard on the novice, the one substituted being more to their advantage, and more intelligible, besides incidentally reinstating some of the members to the novice section, which I have cause to believe has cleared the air a little. The question of the evening was: Shall we have an open show? This caused a heated debate, when much was said on both sides. It was admitted that as regards entries, we were generally favoured, our entries being up to the average for the Midlands, but the trouble was the small attendance of the public, as this has been the cause of loss on shows, our gate never covering more than judges' expenses. This, the majority maintains, is through holding the show in mid-week. On taking the ballot, it was found that seven had voted for holding an open show, and five against, one neutral, so we hope all members will rally round and make this one a success, and attend next meeting to settle date, etc.—W. G. Andrews, Hon. Sec.

NORTH WEST GLASGOW C.B.C.

Monthly meeting and table show of British birds, held in Blythswood Halls, Gt. Western Road, April 25. There were few birds turned out, but what was of them was good. Mr. T. Erskine judged, and his awards were well received. BUNTING: 1, 2, Taylor. CHAFF. OR BRAMBLE: 1, 2, Taylor; 3, 4, Adams; 5, Gill. LARGE BRIT.: 1, 2, Adams; 3, Brown. SMALL BRIT.: 1, Taylor. MULES OR HYB.: 1, Taylor. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Erskine for judging, and Mr. Phillips for presiding, brought a pleasant evening to a close.—Wm. Loan, Sec. and Treas.

MANSFIELD C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held April 26, at headquarters, Horse and Groom Hotel. The meeting was followed by a tripe supper, and upwards of 40 sat down. Great credit is due to the host and hostess (Mr. and Mrs. Farrand) for the able manner in which they saw to the wants of the fanciers and their wives. A concert was given after the tables had been cleared. Mr. Parlin gave of his best at the piano, and Mr. Wright pleased the audience with his comic songs, his rendering of the song entitled "Pushed," bringing the house down. Mr. Cantrell was in a happy vein, and his solos were quite a treat. Mr. Hackett and Mr. Bennett (two new faces to the Mansfield members) added to the pleasant time with their solos, and Mr. Smedley, of Tibshelf contributed towards making the concert a success. Mr. Nuttall, the Sutton secretary (who, by the way, has always given his services to the Mansfield C.B.S.) rendered his favourite song, "Hear all, say now't." A very happy evening was brought to a close by a hearty vote of thanks to the artists for their services, and our genial host appeared in the doorway with his smiling face, and shouted the boxer's password, "Time."—B. Gabbitass, Sec.

BRECHIN C.B.S.

PRESENTATION TO MR. THOMAS BROWN.

The members of the Brechin C.B.S. were out in large numbers on the night of April 23rd. The chair was taken by Mr. Geo. Davidson, president, and after a hearty supper, he welcomed the members and expressed the pleasure he felt at so large a gathering, saying that it was a good augury for the success of the society's jubilee show on 1st November next. He trusted all would enjoy the evening. After some music, Mr. John Stirling was called upon to do the main business for which the meeting was called. Mr. Stirling in a fine speech said that all true fanciers were at all times ever ready to honour a brother fancier, and were also ready to help one if need be. He himself could look back about 23 years, since he identified himself with the society, and Mr. John Craig (who was also present), along with Tom Brown, ran about neck and neck for length of membership As fanciers, we had met to do honour to Mr. Tom Brown, who, as they knew, was going abroad to join his family. The size of the meeting was enough to show Mr. Brown how he was appreciated by his fellow members. In their name he asked Mr. Brown to accept of a Saratoga trunk and hound hand-bag as a mark of their friendship. His friends also wished him a safe voyage, and a happy landing, and also that he would enjoy good health for years to come.

Mr. Brown, in reply, stated he could only thank the members for the very handsome and useful presents. He had always tried to do his best for the society, but he never knew he had so many kind friends as would invite him to such a meeting. Some 12 to 15 years ago, as the members were aware, he was at his zenith in the prize lists, and at that time had to compete against such as the old partners, Messrs. Crannie and Burnett. He wished the society many future years of prosperity, and hoped that its good balance sheets would continue. Although leaving Scotland, he would still get information through Cage Birds of the members' successes, and he would also have pleasure in handing to the president three glass globes of mounted birds, one of which had been a prize winner wherever shown. Along with these he would leave three medals, so that each of the three sections may have a special prize at their coming show. The president thanked Mr. Brown for his kindness, and said he would be delighted to keep the presents till required in November. The musical programme was contributed by Messrs. J. Taylor, J. Crabb, Wm. Hampton, D. Mollison, J. Craig, J. Finlayson, whilst Mr. Sangster was often recalled for his inimitable ditties, and Mr. Geo. Mitchell gave several gramophone selections. Mr. Finlayson having given a racy and witty speech, again proposed the health of Mr. Brown, and on the call of the chairman, "Auld Lang Syne," was sung and brought an enjoyable meeting to a close. Not a little of the enjoyment was due to the tasty manner in which the tables were laid and served by Mr. Clark, of Bridgend.

OXFORD F.S.

Annual general meeting, held at Cape Good Hope Hotel, January 25, President J. Hastings, Esq., in the chair. Owing to the very wet night, the attendance was small. The balance sheet was presented, and showed that a debit balance of £7 commencement of the year had been wiped out, and that the present balance in hand was £3, although upwards of £11 had been lost on the members' and open shows. The secretary, in his report, drew attention to the very poor gate receipts, and brought forward the idea of holding one show per year out of the city. The president and vice-presidents were re-elected; Mr. W. F. Cr[illegible] was re-elected treasurer, Mr. Calcutt, Kidlington, Secretary. The following were added to the committee: Mr. J. H. Levett, T. Wren, and H. J. Haynes, to fill vacancies. The remainder of the committee were re-elected. The president in a few suitable remarks, spoke of the great difficulty of making these society's shows pay, the gate receipts being so small that such show would appear to have very little attraction to the general public. He also thought that amalgamation of the kindred societies would be to the benefit of all. It is to be hoped that such suggestions may be brought into effect. The minor subs. of the Oxford F.S. being only 2s. 6d. per year, the committee hope all fanciers and others would become members, and thereby assist the society in endeavouring to make the society more popular. The committee wish it to be generally known that membership is open to all.—A. H. Calcutt, Sec.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—6d. for the first eighteen words. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen. Name and address to be reckoned. MINIMUM, 18 words 6d.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first Eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Sixpence.

Headlines or Footlines, 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6, according to size.

ADVERTISEMENTS UNACCOMPANIED BY CORRECT REMITTANCE WILL NOT BE INSERTED.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements must in all cases bear the bona fide name and address of the advertiser, and no advertisement will be inserted if addressed to a receiving office, or similar place of call.

Small prepaid advertisements of a general nature and not connected in any way with the Cage Bird Trade are inserted at the rate of ½d. per word throughout. Minimum 12 words 6d.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

REPEATING OF ADVERTISEMENTS

Advt. Manager. "Cage Birds."

ALWAYS USE OUR DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which me must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expirration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

JUDGE SILK

In placing "The Red Feed" on the market, advertised under "Foods" in last week's issue, offers many distinct advantages, which are unique in that this feed cannot be obtained elsewhere. Judge Silk gives to each of his customers the benefit of a life experience in specialisation of "The Norwich Plainhead," and one of the greatest points is "colour." Judge Silk can send you "The Red Feed" blended with hot Natal, and another great colour producer, which he guarantees will moult your birds a wonderful colour. Judge Silk knows that ordinary peppers will not do what he claims for "The Red Feed." "Try it." Sold in tins, 2/6, or double quantity 4/9, post free: Judge Silk, Whitstable. (677)

"PHOSTO"

The recognised greatest food on the market. It has caused a sensation amongst experts. Hens, after use, will feed, and this is not all; the youngsters thrive and grow to a wonderful degree. It will not make a small bird a big one, but I will guarantee it will make them considerably larger. Testimonials coming in daily from all parts. Sent immediately on receipt of P.O. Give it a trial. It will save you pounds. "Phosto" is not a medicine to be given when ill; it is a food for all times, but most beneficial now. Never been known to fail. "Penny Street, Lancaster, April 21st, 1913.—Dear Sir,—Please find 2/6 for another tin of 'Phosto.' I am sorry to say the Goldfinch died the same day 'Phosto' arrived. but my Norwich cock is wonderful. He has filled a nest of eggs due to hatch Wednesday, 23rd. It has also worked a miracle amongst my other birds, and the hens are feeding grandly.—Yours truly, H. Durston." Sold in tins, 1/-, 2/6, and 4/6: Judge Silk, the Bird Specialist, Whitstable. (688)

NOT SINGING.

Wanted a trial. We are confident our Medicines will give you satisfaction. Special offer to all bird fanciers. If you have a cock bird that you are relying upon for the breeding season, that is not in full song, or has gone into the soft moult, or a hen that is dull and moping, and will not shape for breeding, we guarantee you a perfect cure. We have the grandest medicine ever introduced for bringing birds into breeding condition. Ditchfield's Tonic Drops are a guaranteed cure for loss of voice, soft moult, egg-binding, going light, feather-plucking, diarrhœa, and for dull and moping birds. In 7d. and 1/1 (treble size) bottles. Special size, 2/-. This medicine is undoubtedly the finest pick-me-up ever offered for birds that are run down or gone off song. Fanciers note: If our medicines fail to do as advertised, we guarantee to return full money. For bronchitis, wheesing, and hoarseness, get Ditchfield's Special Lung Tonic. Also in 7d. and 1/1 bottles. The safest and most reliable medicine ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. As an advertisement we will send a 7d. bottle of each of the above medicines for 1/-, or two 1/1 bottles for 1/9. All post paid, per return, at our risk. Two valuable seed recipes: How to Feed Linnets and Rollers for Contest Singing, given free to all purchasers of our medicines.—Frank Ditchfield, Bird Specialist, Oldham.

THE LINNET CHALLENGE

Allen, of Leeds, is still challenging, although I accepted now four weeks ago. He challenges the "world." What swank!—does he mean East Africa only? If he had meant business he would at once put his money down, seeing he is the challenger. Anyway, I will try him for another excuse. I will deposit £40, so send your cash to "C.B." on Friday or Saturday, and don't have so much baby talk. My bird is ready. I might say a few of the King's Head fanciers are willing to sing him for nothing, just for the love of the game, but he is a "hero," so will keep away: Fred. Allen, 548, Queens-rd., Sheffield. (686)

Softbills.

SELECTED cock Blackbird, yellow beaked, 2/-, coming on song: William Wright, 54, Shelifield-rd., Marshside, Southport. (685)

HAND-REARED singing cock Blackbird, causes immense attraction, charms the whole neighbourhood; sell cheap, with or without his cage: Woods, Cross-st., Dunstable. (689)

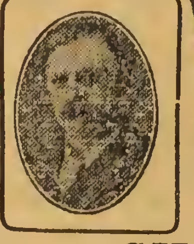
LARK fanciers, those requiring a genuine singing cock Skylark on approval, I will send you a champion on receipt of 1/6; money returned if not satisfied: Miss Paterson, Rifleman, Dunstable. (691)

NIGHTINGALE, in full, free, lovely song, and Blackcap Warbler, also singing magnificently, both perfect condition, house-moulted, gems; price on receipt of stamp: G. E. Weston, specialist, Hill View, Lewisham-rd., Dartmouth Park, London, N.W.

SOFTBILLS: the smaller species; full information upon their proper feeding and management in captivity, is given by H. J. Fulljames in "Nutshell No. 25," which also deals with hand-rearing, and describes the collection of ants' eggs, 2½d. post free, from: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. (2d. from agents; see list on another page).

THE Song Thrush and Blackbird.—Full directions how to keep these favourite songsters in the best possible condition; together with directions for hand-rearing the young and the selection of show birds, will be found in "Nutshell No. 4," 2½d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from agents (list published frequently).

ON receipt of 2/- I will send, securely packed, on approval, the finest singing cock Skylark ever seen or heard, suitable for contest singing or shop's attraction, including free my valuable feeding secret which keeps Larks in full song ten months out of twelve. I have supplied more contest winners than anyone in England; heaps of unsolicited testimonials to prove this; same address 25 years: Woods, Cross-st., Dunstable. (488)



Whitsun Holidays

TO ALL FANCIERS I give a very cordial invitation to COME AND SEE my Aviaries and Stock. I shall be at home all through the holidays, and it will be a pleasure to see any fancier, whether desiring to purchase or not. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign birds. Replete with useful hints: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

BUDGERIGARS and Cockatiels are among the most popular foreign birds, and C. P. Arthur has had a lifetime's experience with them. His book, "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," will show you how to keep them, feed them for health, how to breed them, and how to teach them to talk. The price of this valuable handbook is only 6½d., post free, from: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown, Pekin Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage, have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutshell No. 19," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Get it at once. 2½d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

solved. For full proofs send postcard at once for my large book, "Parrot Prattle." This is the most wonderful book ever offered free of all charge to all Parrot fanciers. (This "Parrot Prattle" is registered copyright, and all infringers and imitators will be proceeded against). It contains hundreds of testimonials from all parts with full names and addresses, many interesting facts, and gives valuable advice and hints to all Parrot buyers. Full details of our original system of selling Parrots on four weeks' trial, at our risk, which we were the first to introduce. We sell Parrots of all descriptions on four weeks' trial, at our risk, before settlement. Cheapest and best in the Kingdom, and any Parrot sold by us and not giving full satisfaction, will be exchanged any time within twelve months. Remember we lead and others try to follow. Write to other dealers as well as us, and judge for yourselves. Lists of Parrots for sale and above book post free on receipt of postcard. Telephone No. 40 Morecambe.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD, C.B.S.

Table show of British birds held at Headquarters, Spencer Hall, April 28th. Although not great in numbers, the quality of the exhibits was of the best, especially in Goldfinches, the judge (Mr. G. E. Weston) remarking that they were the best lot the members had ever placed before him. After placing the awards, the judge passed a few remarks on the merits of the birds, which were much enjoyed by the great number of members and friends present. Mr. R. T. Dann, in the chair, proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Weston for so ably entertaining us. This was seconded by Mr. Geo. Street and brought a very pleasant evening to a close.

Mr. C. A. House will judge at the show of the County of Pembroke F.S., at Pembroke Dock, November 12.

Mr. J. Morgan, Sec., writes that the annual show of the Kidwelly (S. Wales) P.P. and C.B.S. will be hold on October 29.

We hear from Mr. C. Lattimore, Hon. Sec., that Messrs. J. Bailey and G. Wilson will judge at the show of the Yorks C. and C.B.S. of Ireland, Dublin, Oct. 22-23.

Will members of the Nottingham and Notts. O.S., writes Mr. J. G Royce, sec., note that in consequence of the holidays, the next meeting will be May 14 instead of May 13.

Societies desiring the patronage of the Northern British Mule and Foreign Bird Club should apply early to W. Curry, Sec., 60, Grosvenor Gardens, Newcastle, stating classes, and judge appointed to take same, as the same will be allotted shortly.

The first members' young stock show of the Charlotteville Fanciers' Society, writes Mr. C. H. Pope, Hon. Sec., will be held June 19. Membership three miles radius of High Street, Guildford. Sub. 2s. per annum.

I was surprised to see my photo in your last grand double number of Cage Birds, writes Mr. F. C. Ward. I might say that I also took first prize at Lambeth Baths on March 17th last with this fancy costume. I thank you again for the coloured plates you sent.

Mr. J. R. Heseltine, 37, Blundell Street, Hull, writes that himself and Mr. Lambert have been elected joint secretaries of the Hull C.B.S. in place of Mr. Ridley, who has resigned. All correspondence concerning same should be addressed as above.

Will those intending going to our ramble on Sunday next, May 11th inst. to Hildenboro, please meet at the Arsenal Station, S.E.R., at 8.40 a.m. We shall be glad to meet other fanciers, writes Mr. E. Meades, Hon. Sec., Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S.

The Oxford and Dis. C.B.S. has again decided to hold an open show this year. The date fixed is October 16. Will neighbouring secretaries, writes Mr. A. F. Fifield, Press correspondent, please note, and not clash? We have engaged a much larger hall, and are anticipating a good show.

Knowing there are many pigeon fanciers amongst your readers, would you publish the following description of a bird found here to-day? It has been shot, but I hope to pull it round. Ring Nos. (brass) NU11, WF1871, (rubber) 816.—R. F. Richards, Cynwyd Tichan, Cynwyd, near Corwen.

We hear from Mr. W. Hutchison, hon. sec., that the judges for the Glasgow and Dis. C.B.A. Show, Nov. 21-22, are: Crests, Mr. J. McLay, Kirkintilloch; Plainheads, Mr. A. G. Cameron, Kelso; Borders, Mr. T. Arnott, Hawick; Yorkshires, Mr. L. Dykes, Bradford; British and Foreign, Messrs. A. W. Watson, and L. J. Arrighi, Edinburgh.

This week's issue of The Poultry World, on sale to-day at all newsagents and bookstalls will be of exceptional interest to all our readers who keep poultry. In addition to a Beautiful Plate in Four Colours, an announcement appears, offering 1,000 free 7lb. bags of Poultry Food. Cage Birds readers would be well advised to tell their poultry-keeping friends to secure a copy of this number.

I wish to thank you, writes Mr. A. E. Clark (Hemel Hempstead) for the courteous reply, given by your Mr. Weston, in your issue of the 26th April re my Goldfinch and Canary. The whole of the clutch turned out fertile, and I have three young Mules making great strides. Not bad for a beginner? What would we amateurs do without Cage Birds and your experts?

The Leyton C.B.A., write Messrs. Forse and Son, will be pleased to have the company of any fanciers who would like to join them on the ramble through Epping Forest, on May 17. The party will assemble at Loughton Station, whence a start will be made at 3 p.m., or immediately after the arrival of the train, due at 2.58. An excellent meat tea will be provided at the "Owl," about 6 p.m.

Allow me to thank you for the pleasant surprise you gave me to see on the front of Cage Birds the splendid drawing of my yellow hen, 1st and championship diploma at the Crystal Palace, writes Mr. W. Mossie, Shieldyards. It is very lifelike, and the correct type of the Border Fancy; it reflects great credit on your artist. I have been a reader of Cage Birds since its birth, and would not miss it on any account. Wishing you and Cage Birds every success.

Societies desiring the patronage of the specialist clubs at their 1913 shows should apply as follows, stating classification given, and judges appointed: National Green Marked Y.C.C., Mr. J. Chambers, 22, St. Anne's Mount, Burley Hill, Leeds; National British Bird and Mule Club, Mr. J. P. Carr, 45, Overdale Rd., S. Ealing, W.; Southern Norwich P.C., Mr. F. S. Matthes, 34, Rotherhithe New Rd., S.E.; Northern Yorks C.C., Mr. R. Tindale, 141, Stanton St., Newcastle-on-Tyne; Cinnamon Marked Y.C.C., Mr. R. Garnett, 8, Leeds Rd., Windhill, Shipley; Green C.A., F. Handley, 23, Coventry Rd., Wavertree, Liverpool; Yorks and Lancs Brit. B. and M.C., T. H. Inman, 43, Derby Rd., Thornbury, Bradford; Yorkshire C.C., J. Greaves, 279, Hollings Rd., Bradford (closing date May 24); Northern Counties Plainhead Club, Mr. W. Curry, 60, Grosvenor Gardens, Newcastle.

The committee have accepted the kind invitation of the B.B. and M.C. to join them on May 24th, writes Mr. C. W. Law, Hon. Sec. Full particulars and instructions will be sent to all our London members during the coming week.

Scottish Metropolitan Derby.

The following have become members of our association for this year, writes Mr. R. Lile, Sec., 15, Argyll Terrace, Edinburgh: Messrs. W. Archibald, T. Brown, A. Bell, W. Beattie, J. W. Buchan, J. Carson, J. Cook, J. Carlaw, J. Dodds, A. Gilchrist, D. Holden, G. C. T. Hope, A. Jardine, J. B. Kerr, A. Leslie, J. Munro, D. McPhail, J. Morrison, J. McMillan, W. Muirhead, A. Pennycuick, J. Verhies, J. Wilson, R. Willison. I also have a membership fee from Galashiels without any name, and should be pleased to hear from the party. The 1st and 2nd birds in yellow piebald hen class of our show last year have both disappointed their respective owners by proving themselves of the opposite sex. I hope all intending members will let me know at their earliest, and so let me have a much longer list for next time.

Newcastle Out on a Picnic.

The Newcastle C.B.S., writes Mr. T. C. Crawhall, are holding their annual pic-nic at Close House, Wylam (by kind permission of James Knott, Esq., J.P.), on Whit-Monday. They extend a hearty welcome to all Tyneside fanciers and their friends. It is decided to take the 1 p.m. train from the Central Station to North Wylam Station (there are several other trains to Wylam if any should miss this one). Each person takes his or her own food, but tea will be made in the Pavilion, and cups provided. Several of the gentlemen are going on their cycles. Full particulars may be had from Mr. Mackenzio at his aviaries, High Friar Street, Newcastle. Granted fine weather, this should be a most enjoyable day, as the grounds are lovely, and we have practically the whole range of them.

Poultry Keepers: Will You Help the London Hospitals?

For the fifth year in succession "The Poultry World," in conjunction with the committee of the Hospital Saturday Fund, is endeavouring to supply every sick and poor person in London's hospitals and infirmaries with new laid eggs for one week, May 13 to May 20. Last year no less than 24,317 eggs were contributed by readers of our sister paper. They came in small parcels, large parcels, and crates, and all were welcome. This year we again ask those of our own readers who are poultry-keepers to assist in the good cause. If the contribution from any one reader be only half-a-dozen eggs it will help to swell the number. Donors should address their parcels, post paid, or carriage paid, to The Poultry World, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.; or, they will find in that paper for this week a list of egg collecting depots, one of which may be in their own district, and in this way save carriage. Empty packages, boxes, etc., will be returned carriage paid if desired.

Wild-Bird Life.

A Dainty Warbler.

At last the weather is more summer-like, and we can enjoy all the hours we can spare in the open. The trees and hedgerows are rapidly putting on their leafy dress, and the grass in the meadow lands is long enough to hide the big Thrushes, Blackbirds, and Starlings, as they settle in the close herbage. If we walk across it we disturb many more than we expected to find, as a rule they make straight to the hedgerow, the young birds flying in a weak, faltering manner, struggling hard to get to the nearest cover. Their natural instinct tells them that this is their only place of safety, and they will cling to it until fairly hustled out, and even when forced to do so, fly in a half circle, returning to the hedgerow some twenty yards higher up. Among the many birds that have come under notice within the last few days, a Lesser Whitethroat has attracted particular attention, chiefly because he persists in staying in the garden, in spite of his shyness and reluctance to be observed. It was amusing to watch him after a heavy shower catching the flying gnats that hovered over a pool of water in the pathway under a rose arch; his efforts were desperate and his movements quite butterfly-like.

THE LESSER WHITETHROAT.

Starting from one side of the pool, he darted into the air, fluttered and twisted after his prey, and alighted on the opposite side, but he had hardly touched the ground before he was in the air again, and so he continued for some time, until he had either caught all he required or driven the remainder away. Another time he worked the whole length of an eighty feet flower border, hunting over every plant of wallflowers and forget-me-nots, sometimes scrambling in the centre of the plants or creeping underneath like a little feathered mouse, nor did he miss the hunting ground afforded by the trees on the fence. As he came to each in turn, he made his way among the branches, peering under each set of leaves. He is beautifully clean and sweet in plumage, with a lovely white throat, perfect in wings and tail.

Unless a partner soon puts in an appearance we fear we shall lose our dainty visitor, we can promise him his choice of the gooseberry and currant trees to nest in, and as much of the ripe fruit later on as he cares to take. He has not been interfered with up to the present, even our special Robin, who is rearing a full brood in the tool house has not sparred with him once.

Books on Wild Birds
(P. Edward Groon).

You will find the following books useful: "Our Country's Birds," by W. J. Gordon, giving all British species, and a coloured drawing of each bird (rather crude; but, then, the book is but a cheap one), and several diagrams. Also Vol. 1, 2, 3, 4, of Lloyd's Natural History. Try the second-hand bookshops for these. "Birds of the Countryside," by Frank Finn (5s. 4d., post free, from our office) gives a description of all the familiar birds, together with several coloured plates and photographs; this is a capital and very handy volume, written in this author's best chatty style.

Country Rambles.

The following rambles have been arranged: Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S., May 11, to Hildenboro, meet at Woolwich Arsenal Station (S.E.R.) at 8.40 a.m.; National Brit. A Delightful Lantern Lecture on British Birds.

Mr. Oliver G. Pike provides the members and friends of the L. and P.O.S. with a memorable evening's entertainment.

THE officials of the London and Provincial O.S. are to be complimented on the enterprise they show in their endeavours to provide entertaining meetings for their members and, incidentally, for all bird-lovers, as anyone interested in birds is always welcomed at the society's gatherings. On the last meeting night, the services of that well-known ornithologist, Mr. Oliver G. Pike, F.Z.S., etc., were requisitioned (at no inconsiderable expense, we may whisper) and this gentleman gave one of the most absorbingly interesting discourses upon bird life that we have ever been privileged to hear. It is no exaggeration to say that he held his audience fascinated from start to finish.

The information conveyed to us by Mr. Pike was given around a series of lantern slides, from photographs taken by himself, every one of which was distinguished by more than average cleverness and beauty, while some of them were unique. Mr. Pike has deservedly earned a great reputation as a nature photographer, and the slides he put before us this evening deepened the esteem in which those amongst us who had read his books upon bird-life already held him.

With the aid of his camera—not to mention the skill and pertinacity of purpose at the back of it—Mr. Pike has been able to throw light on many problems that perplexed students of birds. As an instance of this one might select for mention his observations on the Buzzard—that really beneficial but only too often persecuted bird of prey. It was a puzzling fact that although three young birds were often hatched out, seldom more than one was reared to maturity. What became of the others? Mr. Pike found that the eggs were laid at intervals of some days, so that the young Buzzards varied in points of development, and that the elder, and consequently the larger and stronger of the family, soon developed cannibalistic tendencies, and proceeded to make meals of its brothers (or sisters). Difficulties over the food supply, no doubt, are at the bottom of this phenomenon. But what a livid light we have here thrown upon the cruel side of Dame Nature's workings!

Magnificent slides of Linnets feeding their young naturally appealed strongly to the audience; they were from a film taken by Mr. Pike on his cinematograph camera. Other wonderful pictures shown us which were taken for cinematograph purposes were of a young cuckoo ejecting a young Sedge Warbler from its nest. This set drew from the lecturer some remarkable details of the life of this feathered impostor and its parents. The latter, said Mr. Pike, were not by any means so callous in behaviour towards their offspring as was generally supposed. On the contrary they (or, at any rate, the mother) paid frequent visits to the nest of the foster-parents to see how their baby was progressing.

A pleasant interlude in the exhibiting of the lantern slides was provided by the reproduction of a gramaphone record of the song of the Nightingale (which, however, we venture to think was of the music of the Sprosser—the continental Nightingale). With the whole of Mr. Pike's long series of fine slides space will not permit us to deal, but they dealt with a wide variety of birds, and by the frequent applause which met them manifestly delighted his audience.

At the close Mr. G. Crabb (who presided) in a few felicitous remarks, complimented Mr. Pike on the excellence of his lecture and his slides, and with the vote of thanks to him coupled the names of Mr. C. W. Law (the able and enthusiastic secretary of the L. and P.O.S.) who provided the lantern and operator, and Mr. G. E. Weston, who had been of some small assistance. Mr. Pike, on returning thanks, was enthusiastically received. The lecture was well attended, and the audience comprised many of London's best-known fanciers, both ladies and gentlemen. It was a delightful and educative evening.

At the Rookery.

The Rooks are having a hard time of it just now. To feed their big nestlings requires a considerable quantity of good sound food, and as a rule the feeding grounds are situated some distance from the rookery. Hour after hour one can see them hurrying homeward with thickened beak, bearing within it some choice morsel for the babies. And then when they arrive, the noisy clamour of the hungry ones must be almost deafening to the hard-worked parent, who immediately leaves his offspring upon a fresh hunt.

To Society Secretaries, Advertisers and Correspondents generally.

Will all correspondents, and secretaries and officials of societies in particular, please note that CAGE BIRDS now goes to press on Wednesday afternoon so that all matter for publication in our issue of the same week MUST reach us on TUESDAY TO BE CERTAIN OF INCLUSION, or first post Wednesday at latest.

It would much facilitate our work if Secretaries and others would kindly write out their club reports, notices, etc., in the style in which they see them printed. Write on ONE SIDE ONLY of each sheet of paper used.

THE HAND REARING OF BRITISH BIRDS.

By
S. A. SANDY

The confiding ways and delightful tameness of hand-fed birds appeal to many bird-lovers, and to those who do not mind the trouble incidental to the process of rearing them, this contribution will prove very helpful.

WHEN your Woodpeckers are full grown, and doing for themselves, the egg should be dispensed with, and the biscuit reduced to a minimum, or the birds will contract fits, and soon all your trouble will have been wasted. Live ant eggs, where it is possible to get them, would be the finest food for rearing any Woodpeckers, and they would require little, if any, additional insect food. I may mention that as soon as these birds move about on the cork they must be placed in separate cages, or they will soon kill each other.

I do not suppose many of our readers are likely to want instructions for rearing a Cornish Chough, but I think they could be successfully reared after the manner described for the Jay.

A Group of Charming Birds.

I will now pass to the smaller insectivorous species, by which I mean the Nightingale, Blackcap, Redstart, Chats, Whitethroats, Wagtails, Tits, Shrike, Creeper, Nuthatch, Wren, and the small Warblers, all of which can be quite successfuly hand-reared if taken at from 10 to 12 days and fed upon the best ant eggs, steamed in preference to pouring boiling water on them, cut up mealworms, small spiders, flies, and caterpillars. Fresh ant eggs if obtainable. A mixture of steamed ant eggs, 2 parts, hard boiled egg, 1 part, and ground sweet biscuit, 1 part, well moistened with grated carrot. The greatest possible care must be taken that the food is quite fresh, and has no trace of sourness.

These birds would require feeding every hour at first, and gradually extend the time up to 3 hours as the birds progress. The cages must be kept scrupulously clean. Blotting paper is a very good covering for the cage bottom, as it absorbs moisture quickly. A drop or two of water should be given after each feeding, and as the birds get older the food may be given less moist. The Blackcap and Whitethroat should, in addition, be given ripe fruit such as full ripe pear, strawberries, raspberries, currants, or elderberries, and banana. It is a good plan to give to young Blackcaps and Whitethroats a little ripe banana with the "tweezers" when rearing them.

Regarding the Shrike, this is a somewhat larger bird than the others, and should be given small house beetles, and when full grown a young mouse or fledgling Sparrow.

There is very little advantage gained by hand-rearing any of the small insectivorous birds, for they all usually take readily to captivity, and for exhibition the wild caught specimens are usually the best, and no matter what care and attention is bestowed upon the hand-reared specimens, they seem, to my mind, to lack the stamina of the naturally reared ones.

The "Hunger Striking" Cuckoo.

There are a few insectivorous species that I have not dealt with, although I think I have mentioned all those that the average reader is likely to come across, and try to rear. There is, for instance, that welcome spring visitor, the Cuckoo. It was generally thought that Cuckoos cannot be kept alive through our winters, and I must confess I was of that opinion until I saw in CAGE BIRDS of April 5, a very interesting letter from an enthusiastic lady fancier, Mrs. Sargeant, in which she records the death of her Cuckoo that had been hand-reared and lived quite happily for nearly five years, and in the issue of the following week the letter of Mr. Vickery in which the writer's experiences of the species extend over a period of thirty years. It is from these letters quite obvious that Cuckoos may be kept successfully, and I daresay the same might be said of many other birds that are rarely seen in cages.

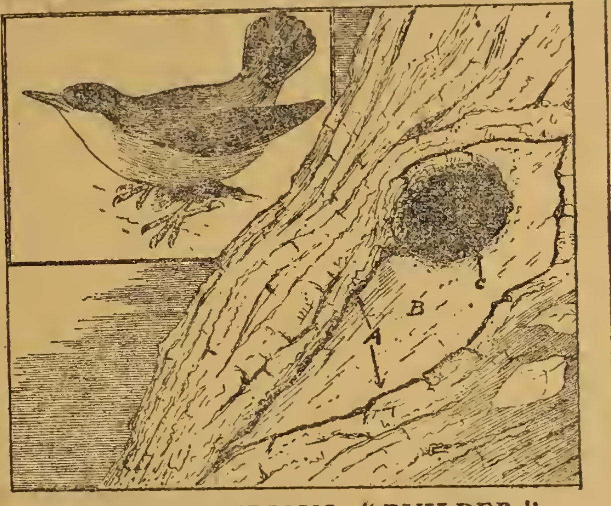
I have understood from friends who have successfully reared the Cuckoo to the age when it should certainly feed itself that as soon as they got tired of feeding it and left it to shift for itself it preferred to "hunger strike" (which seems to be the up-to-date term for starving) and if Mrs. Sargeant or Mr. Vickery would tell the readers of CAGE BIRDS how they succeeded in getting the young Cuckoos to feed themselves, I am sure it would prove interesting. Should any reader come across a young Cuckoo from ten to twelve days old, and decide to try his or her luck at hand-rearing it, the same diet should be used as for the Nightingale, and when fully grown, should it feed itself, a food the same as advised for a Blackbird, with a little hard-boiled egg added. It is strictly an insectivorous bird, and should be treated accordingly.

Two Difficult Subjects.

The Nightjar, or "Goat Sucker," as it is sometimes called, is a bird I have only once seen in captivity, and there really seemed nothing beyond the novelty to recommend it, but if by any remote chance one should come across a young bird of this species it could be reared in the same way as the Cuckoo. The Wryneck, or "Snake-bird," as it is sometimes called, should be treated in the same way as the small insectivorous species mentioned before. I think the only way to get birds of this species to live in captivity is to hand-rear them. Tits and Pipits may, of course, be easily reared, but I prefer the wild caught birds, which readily take to captivity if birds of the year are taken in the autumn. There is really no advantage in hand rearing them.

How to Deal with Seed-eaters.

I will now deal briefly with the seed eating species—Finches and Buntings—but I will at the outset warn readers not to try to hand-rear the young ones from the nest on seeds alone, for, although the adult birds live mostly upon seeds and berries, it would be disastrous to try to feed quite young birds on seed, or they will soon be dead. The rule as to feeding in small quantities and often applies to seed-eating birds equally as to the insectivorous species, and the cages and nest must be attended to as often, and kept as clean as for those species.



AN INDUSTRIOUS "BUILDER."

Nuthatches often choose a nesting site which involves them in a deal of hard labour in the fitting of it to meet their needs. A tiny entrance hole is all they desire, and if the chosen fissure in the tree trunk be too open, they proceed to fill it up with clay. The nesting site above was sketched in Ashstead Woods by Mr. Norman, who estimates that many pounds of clay had been used by the birds. A: the original hole. B: the clay. C: the birds' entrance hole.

When the young are ready to leave the nest, perches should be placed near the nest, and a good supply of fresh sand put into the sand tray of the cage. The seed should be soaked, and the superfluous moisture well dried off before it is given to the young birds.

Supposing the young bird that has come into the reader's hands to be a Hawfinch or Greenfinch, and that it is from ten to twelve days old, and not yet taken to perches, it should be placed in a nest in a small box cage, and the front of the cage covered with a piece of linen. A start should be made to feed on hard-boiled egg passed through a fine sieve, with two parts of ground sweet biscuit added. This can be moistened with a little hot milk and given fairly "sloppy" at first every two hours. Give also greenfly, small house flies and mealworms, cut in halves. As the birds grow, add chopped lettuce or chickweed to the egg-food, mixing the whole into a stiff mass, so that it can be easily given with the tweezers. Give a drop or two of water after each meal. When the birds are nearly full-grown, and have taken to the perches, add well-crushed sunflower seed (without the shell) to the menu, and, in the case of the Hawfinch, some small green peas—when they are just formed in the pod. The Hawfinch should be given also a liberal supply of hawthorn berries, of which it is very fond.

The Goldfinch may be hand-reared upon egg and biscuit, made as recommended for the last two-named birds, but it is, of course, much smaller and more delicate, and, therefore, more difficult to rear. It should have a plentiful supply of green-fly and small ants (which should be just killed with the tweezers). If, however, green fly cannot be found in sufficient quantity, take a mealworm, break one end, squeeze the moisture into the bird's bill. It would not do to simply cut the mealworm in halves and give it to the bird, as the hard skin would be too indigestible for it. When the young feed themselves, give well-cracked hemp, fresh dandelion, thistle, and knapweed (hardhead) seed, and gradually get the young ones to take the usual mixture proper for Goldfinches.

Bullfinches and Hempseed.

The Bullfinch is another of the seed-eaters which makes a delightful pet when hand-reared, and I have found them rather easily reared, if taken ten days and fed in the manner indicated for the Goldfinch, with the addition of scalded German rape seed, but do not give young birds or old either, for that matter, hemp seed, which I have found harmful and sometimes fatal to them. When feeding themselves, their food at first should consist chiefly of German rape and canary seed, well scalded. When the young Bullfinches are pretty well fully grown and on the perches, give them a little scraped raw apple, and when doing entirely for themselves give a piece of apple daily and any green food that is available. They are very fond of dock seed, plantain heads, blackberries, and privet berries, when they are obtainable, and a mealworm occasionally is usually much appreciated.

Linnets should be treated in the same way as Bullfinches, except that the green fly and insects may be dispensed with, as in their natural state they do not feed so largely on small insects as the Goldie and Bullfinch, but seem to confine themselves more to small soft seeds. Linnets can be reared by Canaries quite easily, but those I have seen reared in this way have frequently turned out as wild as those caught in the autumn.

A Complete and Satisfying Food.

The Chaffinch and the Buntings both feed their young almost entirely on small insects, and in attempting to hand-rear either of these species, a liberal supply of green fly, small green caterpillars, and other small insects must be given. I have not found either of these birds care much for green food, but I should certainly add a little well-chopped lettuce or chickweed to the food, and also a few soaked or steamed ant eggs—fresh ones if they can be found. Speaking of fresh ant eggs, I feel pretty confident that all the small insectivorous birds and seedeaters could be quite easily reared on this food alone.

In conclusion, do not forget that the bath daily will go a long way towards strengthening the young birds, and will get them into condition. The cages should be roomy, so that plenty of exercise can be taken, and if the young ones are given a tit-bit when you approach the cage the birds will not lose the delightful tameness that hand-reared birds usually possess. Even when the birds are commencing to feed themselves, it is just as well for the first few days to give them a little food from the tweezers, or whatever is used.

How Modern Exhibition Crests and Crest-breds are Produced.

By Messrs. GREENWOOD AND BURSON

WHEN the young birds are taken away from their parents a good seed-mill will be found very useful, and there are several on the market to-day. The old birds may have the seed whole, but for the young ones it should be ground. We grind canary seed and hemp for the young, and sometimes mix a little egg-food with it, but they should have only a very little of the latter.

Should they seem a little thick, or look sickly, after being taken from the parents, give them milk-sop, with a little maw-seed over it. We let our birds have water as soon as they care to drink. A few drops of tincture of gentian in the water will work wonders with a sickly bird. Osborne or Tea biscuit is a good thing to mix with the crushed seed.

Young birds are very often given too much rich food; the plainer one can feed, the better it is for the birds. Although we said in our last article that we believe egg and bread the best thing to feed the young with, that is our own experience, but there are many good foods on the market to-day which are got out by men of experience, and which very likely may be better than a lot of egg-food for young birds.

When the young are taken away from the parents we try to keep the brood altogether, as they seem to do much better. If they attempt to pluck each other, tie two or three pieces of thick string in the wires for them to play with.
